PREFACE.

HE learned Author of the Book I am going to answer, as far as it concerns my self, sets out with a Preface beginning thus: Our zealous Restorers, who have lately made an unhappy Breach in the Church, have fince thought fit to change the Scene, and to drop King Edward VI.'s Liturgy, in behalf of which they had set out with a great deal of Warmth and Eagerness, and instead of that to compile another of their own. I therefore think proper to acquaint the Reader with the true State of the Case. Bishop Hickes several Years ago publish'd a Book, called, The Christian Priesthood, &c. together with some other Tracts: As an Appendix to which he also publish'd the Communion Office of the first English-Reform'd Liturgy, compiled by our Bishops and Divines in the second and third Years of King Edward VI. In his Prefatory Difcourse, course, and other Parts of the Treatises and Appendix there published, he very much pressed a Restoration of some Prayers and Directions which were in that Liturgy, but which upon a Review of it had been afterwards expunged: Among st which were the Mixture of Water with the sacramental Wine, Prayers for the Faithful departed, the Oblation of the Elements by a Prayer for that purpose, and theInvocation of the Holy Ghost to bless and sanctify them, and make them the Body and Blood of Christ. He also in his * second Collection of Controversial Letters betwixt himself and a Popish Priest, recommended the Unction of the Sick, as prescribed in that Liturgy. Why be did not restore these things amongst these of his own Communion I can't fay: However he had written so much in favour of them, and said so much for the Restoration of them, that several of his Clergy thought it expedient to enquire and examine whether they were only defirable things, or really necessary and ef-Sential to Religion. And upon such Enquiry they were convinced that the four Points recommended in the Christian Priesthood, and the other Treatises published with it, were absolutely necessary to the due Administration of the Eucharist. The Unction of the fick they also found to be an Apostolical Precept, and an universal Practice of the Church'till the Reformation; however as it seems to have been commanded and used for bodily Health, they did not think it so necessary as the other which were, as they conceived, essential to a Sacrament instituted by our Lord himself to be the Food of eternal Life. Also by thus enquiring into the Practice of the ancient Church in the Ministration of Divine Ordinances, they found that Confirmation had always been administred with Chrism or Unction. However this being an Office to be administred by Bishops only, the inferior Clergy did not think it so much their Concern, and therefore it was not mentioned. But as to the Mixture, Prayer for the Dead, the Oblation, and Invocation, they thought them to be their own immediate Concern, and therefore desired some Prayers and Directions might be added to the Communion Office; whereby those things which had been expunged out of the first Liturgy of King Edward VI to please Calvin and his Friends, might be restoned. But it was not desired that they should berestored because they were in that Liturgy, but because they had been in all the Liturgies of the Church from the Apostles Days to the Reformation; that no time could be assigned, no place could be named, where there was a Christian Church that had omitted these things: Excepting that the Armenians mixed not the Cup, but then they were condemned for it by a General Council of the Catholick Church. Neither was it desired that 27107

that they should be restored in the Words of that Liturgy; provided we had the Things, we were very little folicitous about the Form of Words. * And rather than to have made a Breach, a great deal less than the Restoration of that Liturgy was offered. And we conreived it to have been offered to fuch as had a Right and Authority to grant it: Because as we maintain the Independency of the Church upon the State in Matters purely spiritual, we conceived the Bishops of the Church might correct or amend their own Liturgy as they should judge expedient, without the Interpofition of the State. However no Amendment could be obtained. The Majority of the Bifloops and Clergy would not allow that an Iota or Tittle of the Office in the Common-Prayer Book should be altered. Hereupon the Bishops and Priests who believed that what was proposed was an effential Part of Religion, and of absolute Necessity in order to Salvation; judged, as the + Author of No Reason, &c. expresses it, that in this Case, no Fear of its Confequences must distuade from, or could justify the Refusal of it; but each one must faithfully discharge his Duty, and leave the Events to God's All-wife Providence, which over-rules all things, and can eafily cause them to work together for Good to them that love him. And therefore rather chose to separate from the Communion of their Brethren, than longer to want that which we believed an efsential Part of Religion, and of absolute Necessity in order to Satuation. Being therefore obliged to separate, even in the Opinion of our Adversaries themselves, provided the things we plead for are necessary, as we conceive we have proved them to be, we could not fee any Obligation to restore them barely in such a Way as we could have submitted to in order to prevent that Separation. Our Brethren released us from that Obligation by refusing to grant the least we could submit to. Neither do we, as this learned Gentleman insinuates in his Title Page, deny Communion to those who cannot think themselves at liberty to reject the Liturgy of the Church of England for the fake of our New Communion Office, being fill willing to communicate with all those who do not deviate from the Catholick Church of the best and purest Times, by rejecting the Mixture, Prayer for the Dead, the Oblation, and the Invocation; which are the four Points we plead for as absolutely necessary, and which Bishop Hickes taught us ought to be restored. And this New Communion Office (as it is called, the it contains nothing but what is much older than the present Communion Office of the Church of England, where it differs from it) was compiled, not to deny Communion to those who would not receive it, but only to preserve a Uniformity among our selves, 'till our Brethren would agree to grant us what we believed and still believe, notwithstanding their Arguments to the contrary, to be absolutely necessary. Nay they themselves own them to be desirable things, and what they would be glad to have restored. For so the Author of No Necessity, &c. one of our most zealous Opponents, tells us in the beginning of that Book, saying, What you propose as Terms of Communion, I freely own are desider anda; and should BE HEARTILY GLAD to have them and many other valuable Usages of the ancient Church restored in a regular way. So that we have here the Confession of an Adversary that these are valuable Usages of the ancient Church, and that he would be heartily glad to fee them restored, only he does not like the way we have taken to restore them. Well but how have we dropped King Edward VI.'s Liturgy, which is the Point the Author of No Just Grounds, &c. now charges us with? He says, we have taken upon us to expunge the Decalogue. But the Decalogue is not in the Communion Office of K. Edward's first Liturgy, nor indeed in any CommunionOffice whatever that is not of a later Date. We cannot therefore be said to have dropt that Liturgy by not putting the Ten Commandments, which are no part of it, into our Office. The next Point is, that we pray that the Bread in the Eucharist may be made our Saviour's Body, and the Cup his Blood, as formally and exprelly as the forwardest Transubftantiallift

Stantiallist in Europe could do it. In the Book called No sufficient Reason, this learned Author had made the same Objection to us, saying, * They now require to pray in these Words, SEND DOWN THINE HOLY SPIRIT, THE WITNESS OF THE PASSION OF OUR LORD JESUS, UPON THIS SACRIFICE, THAT HE MAY MAKE THIS BREAD THE BODY OF THY CHRIST, AND THIS CUP THE BLOOD OF THY CHRIST, without any manner of Restriction, and in as express Terms as C. Du Perron, or Bellarmin, or any of the most zealous Tranfubstantiators could ever desire, and beyond what is used in their Canon of the Mass. But how is this dropping the first Liturgy of King Edward VI.? Did we ever plead to have that Liturgy restored Word for Word? We pleaded for some Prayers and Directions in that Liturgy to be restored in Sense, but never insisted to have it restored in the very Words. And is there not a Petition to the same Sense with this in that Liturgy? Most certainly there is, and the Author of No Sufficient Reason cites it in the same place. Hear us (O merciful Father) we befeech thee, and with thy Holy Spirit and Word vouchfafe to bless and fanctify these thy Gifts and Creatures of Bread and Wine, that they may be UNTO US the Body and Blood of thy most dearly beloved Son Jesus Christ. He has put the Words unto us in a distinguishing Character, as if those Words made a vast Difference betwixt the Prayer we use, and that which is in King Edward's But as the Author of the Vindication of the Reasons and Defence, &c. * fays, This is to make a Distinction without a Difference. For unless the Bread and Cup are made the BODY AND BLOOD OF CHRIST by Confecration, how they can be fo to us is past my Comprehension. For how can they be the Body and Blood of Christ unto us, unless they are first the Body and Blood of Christ? And the only Reason why we differ here in the Words, though not in Sense from King Edward's Liturgy, was because we thought it more expedient to use this Petition after the Oblation, as it is in ALL Liturgies used in any Church before the Reformation excepting the Roman Canon. And that also is the only Communion Office before this of King Edward's that has the Words unto us inserted in this Petition. And we have herein gone no farther beyond the Canon of the Mass, than all Christians, excepting those of the Communion of the Church of Rome, ever did before the Refor-But do thefe Words UNTO US make mation. any thing against the Doctrine of Transubstantiation? I am sure they can't as they stand in the first Liturgy of King Edward VI. or the Roman Miffal: Because they are there used before the Words of Institution, and confequently before even the Romanists suppose the Elements to be Transubstantiated. But we use this Prayer after the Words, This is my Body, this is my Blood, have been pronounced, and even then call the Elements, Bread and the Cup; which this Gentleman can't but know the zeatous Transubstantiators would not do. But we pray that they may be made the Body and Blood, WITH-OUT RESTRICTION, AS FORMALLY AND EX-PRESLY AS THE FORWARDEST TRANSUBSTAN-TIALIST IN Europe COULD DO IT. But I always looked upon Transubstantiation, to be a RESTRICTION, and to determine the Modus of the Change we believe to be made in the Elements by Consecration. Therefore to pray that they may be made the Body and Blood WITHOUT RESTRICTION, is very far from what the zealous Transubstantiators desire. The Martyrs in Queen Mary's Reign were ready enough to own the Eucharist to be the Body and Blood of Christ, WITHOUT RESTRICTION. It was only the Restriction of Transubstantiation which they stuck at, and suffer'd their Bodies to be burn'd rather than they would own it. The very Worthy and Learned Mr. Spinckes * observes this particularly, with Relation to Mr. Bradford the Martyr. It is, says he, his Body.

I CONFESS: AND PRAY YOU ALL HEARTILY TO BEWARE OF THESE, AND SUCH LIKE Words, THAT IT IS BUT A SIGN OR A FI-GURE OF HIS BODY: EXCEPT YOU WILL DISCERN BETWIXT SIGNS WHICH SIGNIFY ONLY, AND SIGNS WHICH ALSO DO REPRE-SENT, CONFIRM AND SEAL UP, (OR, AS A MAN MAR SAY) GIVE WITH THEIR SIGNI-FICATION. This Holy Martyr here plainly calls it his, or Christ's Body, without any Restriction; he declares that he believes and confesses it to be so; nay, he will not allow it to be called the Sign or Figure of his Body, except a Restriction be put to such Expressions. And yet this would not satisfy the zealous I ransubstantialists, they burned bim at a Stake, because he would not restrain the Words, This is my Body, to their Sense. And if the Reader will consult Fox, I doubt not but he will find many other Martyrs, that readily confessed, the Bread to be Christ's Body, and the Cup his Blood, WITHOUT RESTRICTION, and if that would have satisfied the Transubstantiators, they would not have scrupled to have sav'd their Lives by such a Confession. I have not Fox by me, and will not pretend to give Instances without Book, but I am satisfied there are many such there. What means then this Accusation of Transubstantiation and Improvements, and who can undertake to promise where these Restorers will stop at laft? : 2277 2

last? As if these Restorers were running into all the Corruptions of Popery, because they have restored a very good Prayer that is as opposite to the Popish Doctrine of Transubstantiation, as any thing in the Communion Office the Accuser himself uses. So opposite, that in the Council of Florence, the Transubstantiators excepted against it, as directly contrary to their Doctrine, and would not be satisfied till some Latinizing Greeks put such a Sense upon them, as they would by no means bear. And the very Worthy and Reverend Mr. Spinckes (though of the same Communion with this Gentleman, if he be, as he calls himself, a Non-juror, and therefore I hope his Authority will be of some Weight with him) cites * this very Prayer as an ancient Evidence against Transubstantiation. For among st other clear Evidences of the Primitive Fathers against that absurd Doctrine, he thus introduces the very Words of our Prayer which are here accused for being express in Favour of that Doctrine, saying, Here I take Occasion to mention also the Apostolical Constitutions in which I find these Words, THAT HE MAY SHEW THIS BREAD THE BODY OF THY CHRIST, AND THIS CUP THE BLOOD OF THY CHRIST. For certainly to shew or make the Bread the Body of Christ, can never consist with Tran-

Substantiation. For that which is made of andther Thing, must retain the Substance of that whereof it is made: Therefore to pray that the Bread may be MADE the Body of Christ, plainly implies that the substance of the Bread is still believed to continue; whereas the Doctrine of Transubstantiation teaches not that the Bread is MADE the Body, * but that there is made a conversion of the whole Substance of the Bread into the Body; so that no more remains of the Bread and Wine but the Appearance only: which is not to MAKE the Bread the Body, but to annihilate the Bread, and substitute the Body in its room under the same Appearance. And I most heartily thank the Reverend Mr. Spinckes, for so ingenuously clearing us from the groundless Aspersion which the Author of No sufficient Reason, &c. and No just Grounds, &c. would lay upon we For if this Prayer be inconsistent with Transubstantiation (and if it was not, so judicious a Writer would never have produced it as an Evidence against that Doctrine) then the rhetorical Flourish of this Author upon it falls to the Ground. Well, but we have dropped King Edward's Liturgy again, for we have added two new Offices for Unction, the one in Confirmation, and the other upon the fick Bed. I confess indeed Kin

King Edward's Liturgy do's not expresty order the Unction at Confirmation; but it seems to do so, when it enjoins those words to be said, confirm and strengthen them with the inward Unction of the Holy Ghoft. which feem improper without some visible Sign of that Unction; and we know that Chrism or Unction was always used at Confirmation from the Apostle's Days in all Times and all Places to the Reformation. And for the Unction of the Sick, that is expressy enjoined in King Edward's Liturgy, if the sick Person desire it; and the Prayer appointed there is the very same that is retained in our Office on that occasion. So that this Gentleman is very nnlucky in all bis Instances where he accuses us of dropping King Edward VL's Liturgy, for there is not one of them which is not conformable to it. Therefore his Accusation of any Uniteadiness already shewn is apparently false and groundless: Nor have we given any cause to doubt what other steps may in time be thought necessary to be taken. And he had no manner of Reason to urge our Unsteadiness as a seasonable Caution to all that tender the Welfare either of themselves, or of the Church whereof they are Members, to beware how they entertain any Thoughts of ever joining themselves to us. mitive Doctrines and Practices. It is true, the first Liturgy of King Edward VI. was spoken of and recommended as better in some. Prayers and Directions than the second Liturgy of that King's Reign, which has been fince followed; but then it was not recommended upon the Authority of those who compiled it, or any other Authority of that Age; but only as these Prayers and Directions were apparently conformable to the Doctrine and Practice of the Primitive Church in the first and purest Ages. Therefore though in our new Offices we had all along a due regard to King Edward's Liturgy, and have been very far from dropping it, (as this Author wrongfully accuses us to have done in order to persuade People to beware of us, as designing Persons that have a Purpose to draw them into Popery, and on that Account pretend one Thing and do another) yet we thought proper to have a much greater regard to the Doctrine and Practice of the Catholick Church at or before the Council of Nice, which we have all along professed to make our Test and Standard, and never pleaded for any thing in King Edward VI.'s Liturgy but as it was conformable to that Standard.

However it seems in this learned Author's Opinion, we have no TOLERABLE Foundation for what we have hitherto done, and are far from having proved the ESSENTIALITY of the Ulages we have taken upon us to revive. Not any one of them has been yet maintain'd by ANY JUST OR GOOD AUTHO HITY. Tet they have been maintained by the Scriptures, as understood by the confentient Doctrine of the Catholick Church in all Fimes, all Places, and by all the Faithful, from the Age immediately succeeding the Apostles, 'till some Schoolmen in the most corrupt Ages of Popery began to teach the Mixture to be unnecessary. Which is as just and as good Authority, as we have for the Canon of the New Testament : That is, as we have to believe that Book as tranfmitted to us, was written by those Apostles and Evangelists whose Names it bears. This has been shewed by all that have written on our Side of this Controvers; and I can't but wonder, that this learned Genvleman flould vall that infufficient Byidence, which is as good as any he can bring for the Canon of Scripture, as good as can be brought for any historical Truth, for any thing that was done or instituted before our Times. And it is He, not We; that undervalues the Evidence we have for the Canon of Scripture, when he fags, that not one of the Utages we have revived, has been nyet maintained by any just or good Authority. dence of a Truth. But all this Evidence is no just or good Authority with this Gentleman, who though stiling himself a Nonjuros yet in this Point closes with the Profbyterians and other Differers of that fort, * and is for bringing us to fling up the Authorsty of the earliest Eathers, and to acquiesce in Scripture and Reason as our only RULE. That is, to acquiesce in the Scripture not as understood by the earliest Fathers of the Church, ar by the whole Catholick Church the best and purest Times, but as underfood by any Man that can read it, though he knows nothing of the Customs of the Church, to which the Scripture frequently alludes, and which are to be learned from the ancient Fathers.

Therefore we boving what we conceive to be just and good Authority for these Usages, do think it is not impossible to justify our selves with regard to a Breach in the Church made on this Account. We have done nothing but what in the Judgment of The Hammond, even Mockness it self obliges to And be is a Person cannot be obought any ways partial to our Cause, since he lived and died in the Community of the Church of England near three-score Tears before this Controvers, began.

^{*} See Pierce's Letter to Dr. Benner, p. 30.

Now in his Practical Catechian, * a Book defervedly esteemed, and recommended by the most learned Divines of the Church of England, the Scholar puts this Question. " But what if the particular Church wherein I was "baptized, shall fall from its own fledfallnels, and by Authority or Law, fet up that " which, IF IT BE NOT CONTRARY TO PLAIN WORDS OF SCRIPTURE, IS YET CONTRA-" RY TO THE DOCTRINE OR PRACTICE OF THE UNIVERSAL CHURCH, IN THE FIRST " AND PUREST TIMES, What Will Meek-"ness require me to do in that Case!" Therefore as we conceive it is clear, that the Church of England has made a Defection from the univerfal Church of the first and purest Times, in laying aside these Usages, What Meekness which requires dir Obedience and Submiffion to the Catholick Apollotick Church, and not to the Particular wherein we live when the differes from it, obliges as to restore them as far as it is in our Power to do so. Nay we have the Authority of the Church of England her self for what we have done, which I suppose this Author will own to be a just and good Authority, * For she expresty teaches, that " BEFORE " ALL THINGS, THIS YE MUST BE SURE OF " ESPECIALLY, that this Supper be in such " wise done and ministred, as our Lord and " Saviour did, and commanded to be done, " as his holy Apostles used it, and THE " GOOD FATHERS IN THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH " FREQUENTED IT." Here she plainly teaches, that Christ commanded, the Apostles used, and the good Fathers in the Primitive Church frequented this Ministration in the same manner; consequently that when this Sacrament is done and ministred, as the Fathers frequented it, then it is also done as the Apostles nied it, and as Christ commanded it to be done. Now we find by undoubted and most numerous Testimonies, that when the good Fathers of the Primitive Church frequented this Supper, it was always ministred in the manner we desire, and which we have restored as far as it has been in our Power. For Water was then constantly mixed with the Wine, not in hot Countries only, where the Wines were strong and might need such a Temperament to make them fit to drink, as our Opponents pretend, but in colder Climates, such as France in particular, where Irenaus was Bishop, and where every Body knows the Wines do not need Water to make them more palatable. The Faithful departed were always prayed for, that they might Rest in Peace, and obtain a joyful Resurrection. The Element's were constantly offered to God in Remembrance of Christ's Death, by a particular Prayer for that Purpose: And God the Father was desired to send down the Holy Ghost upon the Bread and the Cup, to make them the Body and Blood of Christ. This has been sufficiently proved to be the Method of ministring this Sacrament, as the good Fathers of the Primitive Church frequented it; confequently, according to the Doctrine of the Church of England, it was so used by the Apostles, and commanded by Christ. And then as the Church of England teaches, that BEFORE ALL THINGS, THIS WE MUST BE SURE OF ESPECIALLY, THAT THIS SUPPER BE IN SUCH WISE DONE AND MINISTRED; She plainly teaches, that the she her self should direct or prescribe the contrary, yet we must rather follow this Command, Use, and Manner of frequenting: For if this is to be done ESPECI-ALLY AND BEFORE ALL THINGS, as undoubtedly it is, then BEFORE the Commands of the

the Church of England to the contrary, tho her Communds are undoubtedly as obligatory as those of any other particular Church.

As to the Division caused by our earnest Define for the Restoration of these necessary Things, I shall answer in the Words of the learned Mr. Johnson, * in his prefatory Difcourse to the first Volume of his Unbloody Sacrifice, " It is no more to be wonder d, that " Disputes and Oppositions happen now, than " that they have done fo in all preceding Times; " --- For when some affert Truth, and o-" thers contradict it, Divisions must of ne-" ceffity be the Effect; yet the Affertors in " this Case cannot but believe, that as their " Cause is right, so the Divine Providence will not permit such Divisions to be lasting? " For great is the TRUTH, and will prevail " even against the most powerful Opponents. In a Word, the Writers for the Mix-" ture, Prayer for the Dead, the Oblation, " and the Invocation, may be impleaded as " the Ring-leaders of Division and Faction; " but then this Accusation may with as good " Reason be laid against them who write " for the Necessity of Episcopacy in Scot-" the Vulgar Tongue in Spain or Italy." But then he requires, this Union may be in the Truth, and not in Error; Saying, * Mark them which cause Divisions and Offences, contrary to THE DOCTRINE YE HAVE LEARNED. That is, contrary to what he and the other Apostles taught in all the Churches they had founded. Therefore, if what they have taught be laid aside and neglected, as we conceive it to have been with regard to the contested Points, those who would restore them are not to be counted the Causers of the Division, but those that oppose such Restoration. However be thus concludes his Preface: I carneftly beg of our old Friends and Brethren, who have so unhappily withdrawn from us, that they will remember we continue still the same that we were, and that when we were united, it was upon our Principles, not theirs. But may not a Papist say just the same to a Protestant, nay, have they not in effect often said so, or to the same purpose? Rome? Did not the Church of England make the Alterations, and do not the Romanists continue as they were? But what Answer would this learned Author make to a Romanist, who should talk to him in this manner? Would he not say, It is true indeed, the Church of England was once united to your Church, and upon your Principles; but having discovered them to be corrupt and erroneous Principles, we were obliged to depart from them; and you by adhering to those Principles only continue in an Error, which I thank God we have feen and forsaken? Some such Answer as this our Author, or any other Protestant, would make to a Romanist, who should speak to him as he does to us, and the same Answer may we return. But then I desire our Author, and earnestly beg of him and all of his Persuasion, our old Friends and Brethren, that they will consider that when the Church was truly Catholick, truly Universal; when all the several Churches throughout the World were of one Communion, and united in Truth not in Error, as they were before, at, and some time after the Council of Nice, it was upon our Principles not theirs.

S I was writing a Book, which I publish'd the last Year, wherein I endeavour'd to prove that Tradition is necessary to explain and interpret the boly Scriptures, a learned Gentleman, as he appears by his Book, (for I know not who he is otherwise than by Report) publish'd a little Treatise, which he call'd, No sufficient Reason for restoring the Prayers and Directions of King Edward the VIth's first Liturgy. In which I observ'd he had filled several Pages with Arguments against Tradition, the thing which I had pleaded for in the Treatife I was then writing: Which Arguments I then thought proper to return an Answer to in a Postscript to that. Discourse

Discourse of mine upon Tradition. But the learned Author has thought my Answer insufficient, and has therefore made a Reply to it, which he calls, No just Grounds for introducing the new Communion Office, or denying Communion to those who cannot think themselves at liberty to rejett the Liturgy of the Church of England for its sake, in Answer to a late Appendix, and to the Learned and Reverend Dr. Brett's Postscript. Now, as I conceive, that I have only maintain'd the Truth in that Postscript; and as nothing which this learned Author has said by way of Reply, has really invalidated one thing I have there endeavour'd to maintain, I think it proper to make this Rejoinder.

The Author of No Sufficient Reason, &c. advanc'd these two Propositions. 1. Scripture, and not Tradition, is prescribed by our Lord to his Disciples as the Rule they are to walk by. 2. The Tradition pleaded for the four controverted Points is not so full and unquestionable as it is represented to be. He says, * That he did not deny Tradition its proper Use, and the Regard due to it upon that account, but only he was defirous to shew, as he thought he had good Reason to do, that though it might be appealed to for explaining and corroborating some Passages in Scripture, yet it ought by no means to interfere with it, EITHER BY CONTRADICTING WHAT THAT TEACHES, OR TEACHING ANY THING AS OF NECESSITY TO SALVATION, WHICH THAT HAS NOT TAUGHT AT ALL. I observe he is very cautious how he allows any Use at all to Tradition. He seems, the more he thinks of it, to have still less and less esteem for, and regard to it. In the Book call'd, No Reafon, &cc. (which whether written by him, or another, he + cites as speaking his own Thoughts in this Point) the Author fays of Tradition, * I own IT IS OF GREAT USE when it is truly primitive, for establishing and explaining such Duties as are not so fully taught in Scripture, but that Disputes may arise about them: But No Sufficient Reason, &c. diminishes the Force of these Words, as he cites them, and says MAY BE OF Use: And in No just Grounds, &c. he comes lower yet, and does not DENY Tradition its proper Use, &c. That is, he will not directly fay it is of no Use at all; 'tis possible it may in the Cases to which he restrains its Use, but seems very indifferent whether he grant it to be fo or not. And if he only did not deny it before, he has left himself at liberty to deny it when he pleases. But this is only by the by, to shew how his due Regard to Tradition, as he calls it, begins to dwindle into nothing.

But to come to the Point in difference: He says, Tradition must by no means interfere with Scripture, either by contradicting what that teaches, or by teaching any thing, as of Necessity to Salvation, which that does not teach at all. Now I readily grant that Tradition must not interfere with Scripture. And I grant also that it does interfere with it when it contradicts it: But how can it be said to interfere with it, by teaching any thing which that does not teach at all, or which it says nothing of, is past my Apprehension. At this rate everything that we do, which is not taught in Scripture, interferes with it: And we must do nothing upon any Occasion, but what we can shew a Command in Scripture for: Because we are certainly obliged to do nothing contrary to Scripture: And to be contrary to Scripture, and to interfere with Scripture, are fynonymous Terms. Neither does the putting in the Words, as necessary to Salvation, at all alter the Case, unless he could prove that the Scripture any where fays, that there is nothing necessary to Salvation, but what is contained in Scripture. But as the Scripture has no where taught any fuch Doctrine, I do not fee that I in any wife interfere with Scripture, should I fay, that Tradition may teach some Things as necessary to Salvation, which the Scriptures have not taught at all. Now the whole of all that this learned Author has faid upon this Point, depends upon this false Maxim he here lays down, that whatever is taught as necessary to Salvation, that is not taught in Scripture, is contrary to Scripture. But if it cannot be taught from Scripture, that the Scripture has taught ALL Things necessary to Salvation, then this pretended Maxim falls of course, and all he has faid upon this Head can be of no fervice to his Caule.

The Point he undertook to prove in his No sufficient Reason, &c. is, as he here tells us, that Scripture, and not Tradition, is prescribed by our Lord to his Disciples as the Rule they are to walk by. I readily granted him in my Postscript, that our Lord did prescribe the Scriptures to his Disciples as a Rule to walk by. But he did not prescribe it as the only Rule, exclusive of all others: For when our Lord prescribed this Rule to his Disciples, there were no Scriptures written but the Scriptures of the Old Testament; and, I conceive, no Christian will say that our Lord prescribed the Scriptures of the Old Testament as the

And yet all the Texts this learned Author has brought to prove that Scripture, and not Tradition, is the Rule prescribed by our Lord, prove no other than the Scriptures of the Old Testament to be this Rule. * For when Isaiah said, To the Law and to the Testimony, if they speak not according to this Word, it is because they have no Light in them. And again, Seek ye out of the Book of the Lord, and read. There was no Scripture in being, but the Scriptures of the Old Testament, neither was the Canon of that Testament yet compleated, many Books of the Old Testament being written after the Prophely of Isaiah. So in the New Testament, when our Saviour said, Search the Scriptures; tho' the Scriptures of the Old Testament were then compleated, yet there was not one word of the New Testament written. And when in the Acts of the Apostles, the Jews at Beræa are commended as more noble, of a milder and better Temper than those of Theffalonica, and for this Reason, because they receiv'd the Word with all Readine's of Mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, those more noble Jews had no other Scriptures to fearch but those of the Old Testament. + So when our Saviour confuted the Sadducces from Scripture, and when St. Paul confuted the false Prophets from Scripture, it was only from the Scripture of the Old Testament. These are all the Texts of Scripture he has produced to prove his Proposition;

for as to his faying, that "St. Paul teaches that st the Church is built upon the Foundation of the 44 Apostles and Prophets, and especially upon our 66 bleffed Lord and Saviour, as its chief Corner Stone, and not the Apostles and Prophets, and " our Lord himself upon the Church:" I see not what Use is to be made of it in this Controverfy. Does this Text prove that the Apoftles and Prophets, or our Lord himself prescribed the Scriptures as our only Rule to walk by? There is no one Word of that Matter here. The other Texts indeed do prove the Scriptures to be our Rule; but are far from proving it to be our only Rule, even in Matters necessary to Salvation. They fend us to no other Scriptures, but the Scriptures of the Old Testament; and therefore if they make the Scriptures they fend us to the only Rule, by which we are to be guided in Matters necessary to Salvation, they exclude not only Tradition but the New Testament also. For thus we may argue, what our Lord prescribed to his Disciples as the Rule of Salvation, is the only Rule of Salvation. But our Lord prescribed the Scriptures of the Old Testament, not the Scriptures of the New Testament, to be the Rule of Salvation, therefore the Scriptures of the Old Testament are the only Rule of Salvation, and not the Scriptures of the New Testament. This is plainly the very Argument he uses against Tradition: And thus it runs. What our Lord prescribed to his Disciples, as the Rule for them to walk by, is the only Rule they are to walk by. But our Lord prescribed Scripture to his Disciples, and not Tradition, as the Rule they are to walk by, therefore Scripture is the only Rule they are to walk walk by, and not Tradition. But this Argument plainly proves too much, because it excludes the New Testament as well as Tradition; fince our Saviour prescribed only the Old Testament in the Texts referr'd to by this Author, or in any other Texts which can be produced to the fame purpose. And that which proves too much, proves nothing. Therefore this learned Author has yet been very far from proving this Proposition from Scripture, That Scripture and not Tradition, that is Scripture exclusive of Tradition, is prescribed by our Lord to his Disciples, as the Rule they are to walk by : fince the Texts he . has referr'd to, prescribe only the Scriptures of the Old Testament: If they are to be understood exclusive of any other Rule, they exclude the New Testament as well as Tradition. But if these Texts are not exclusive of another Rule, as it is certain they are not, fince they exclude not the New Testament, which is another Rule different from that prescribed in these Texts, then neither do they exclude Tradition; which may yet be a Rule to convey to us the Will of God as well as the Scripture, for any thing has hitherto appear'd to the contrary.

The only Reason why the Scripture is believed to be the Rule of a Christian's Faith and Practice, is because it contains the revealed Will of God: Because it contains what was written by divine Inspiration. But whether it contains ALL that has been revealed by God, ALL that has been delivered by divine Inspiration, is more than this Author or any one else has yet proved. Whatever therefore contradicts the Scripture is not to be followed, because it contradicts the revealed Will of God. But then it do's not follow that there may not be a part of the Revealed Will of God which is not contain'd in Scripture. And to teach fomething which the Scripture has not taught at all, though it be taught as necessary to Salvation, does not interfere with Scripture, provided what is taught do not contradict the Scripture, because God has no where revealed that all Things necessary to Salvation are contained in Scripture. Neither is this a new Proposition newly advanced, or such as no Member of the Church of England has dared to advance before: I will shew, that some very learned Men of that Communion have long since taught the same, and have never, that I could understand, been censured for it.

Dr. Hammond * in his Discourse of Heresy, written in the year 1656. fays, "The adequate "Object of the Christian's Faith are these Verities "which have been revealed to us by God, to be "thus believed to Righteousness, called therefore ω υγιαίνοντες λόγοι, words not only true but wholesome; the Belief whereof is required in or-" der to our Soul's Health: The next Inquiry " is, how we that live in the same Distance from " Christ and his Apostles in respect of Time, that we are situate from Heaven, which now con-" tains Christ, in respect of Place, may come within any Reach of these Revelations of Christ, or to any competent undoubted Affarance, " that those are indeed such, which are pretended to be fo? I have thought it proper to produce what these two very learned Divines of the Church of England, who lived and died in her Communion, have written to prove that the Scripture is not fo prescribed as the Rule for a Christian to walk by, and adhere to, as to exclude Tradition. That the Reader may be fatisfied this is not a Principle first advanced by us, but what has been maintained by eminent and learned Divines of this Church threescore Years ago, and upwards. I doubt not but I might have produced others, both before and fince, of the same Communion, that have afferted the same, if I would give my felf the trouble to fearch: But I conceive it to be needless to my purpose, two such eminent Men being sufficient to shew that it is not a Doctrine newly started, and that is the main Reason for which I have produced them. Neither do I urge what they fay, as of Authority, to fway the Reader to our Opinion in this Matter because they have said it: For I do not conceive that they, or any others fince the Charismata, or miraculous Gifts and Graces ceased in the Church, are of more Authority, as to any Opinion deliver'd by them, than my learned Opponent himself, or any other who is of a different Opinion from them. However, if their Reaions and Arguments are more cogent and convincing than those of the contrary Opinion, I hope the impartial unprejudic'd Reader will be convinc'd by these Reasons and Arguments which are so cogent. Now I conceive Dr. Hammond's Argument is unanswerable. The adequate Object of the Christian's Faith are, says he, those Verities ties which have been revealed to us by God. This I think cannot be deny'd, for fure we are obliged to believe and obey the Will of God when duly revealed to us. This Will of God was revealed to the Apostles to be by them conveyed to others. This also I persuade my self all Christians are agreed in. The Apostles preached before they writ, and planted Churches before they addressed Epistles to them. This is apparent from the New Testament it self, and therefore cannot be disputed. From hence it follows that what the Apostles preached or delivered to the Churches by word of Mouth, was as much the revealed Will of God as what they wrote. This is a necessary Consequence, which I suppose will not be denied. Therefore it must be also granted, that where we bave as good Assurance that any thing was delivered by the Apostles by word of Mouth, as we have that any thing was written by them, they are equally the Matter of the Christian's Belief. Whether there be any thing so conveyed to us, or whether the Apostles did deliver any one thing which they taught as of perpetual Use and Obligation which they did not put in Writing in some part or other of the New Testament, is another Question. It is sufficient for my present purpose, that if it can be shewed that there is any thing which can be proved to have been taught by the Apostles as of universal and perpetual Obligation, though they did not put it in Writing in some part or other of the New Teftament, it is to be observed as the revealed Will of God. That is, when we have as good Evidence that one was taught, as we have, that the Books of the New Testament are Apostolical Writings.

Mr.

Mr. Thorndike's Arguments are no less clear than Dr. Hammond's, and though I have made a large Transcript from him, I could have much enlarged, and fo I might have done by Dr. Hammond had it been necessary. I must grant indeed that Mr. Thorndike does not directly undertake to shew, that what is not taught at all, either clearly or but obscurely, in the Scriptures, may be necessary to Salvation, but only that something may be necessary to Salvation which is not CLEAR-Ly taught in the Scriptures. Yet however he is pleased to limit his Proposition, his Arguments prove as much as I have produced them for, and their Confequence is plain and obvious: And his Reasonings do clearly prove, that there is nothing in Scripture to prove that the Scripture contains all things necessary to Salvation. For this is the Substance of his Argument, No one ever pretended that all things necessary to Salvation are contained in any one Book of the Scripture, but only in the whole Scripture taken together: That is, no one ever faid or supposed, that all things necessary to Salvation are taught in the Book of Genefis alone, or in the Gospel of St. Matthew alone, or in any other one, two, or three, or more Books of the Old and New Testament, but only in all of them together, some things necessary to Salvation are in one part of the Bible, some in another; to they who maintain that all things necessary to Salvation are taught in the Scripture, are to be understood, not as speaking of any one, two, three, or more Books of Scripture, but of the whole Scripture together. This I take to be my learned Opponent's Opinion, * who utterly denies that the Apostles taught any thing as necessary to be believed or practised, which they did not put in writing in some part or other of the New Testament. Consequently, if the Apostles taught all things necessary to Salvation, which it is allowed on all Hands that they did, then all things necessary to Salvation are taught in the New Testament. This is plainly what he maintains: But Mr. Thorndike's Arguments evidently shew that this cannot be proved from any Text of Scripture, which he thus demonstrates: There is not any Text of Scripture, any Letter or Syllable of the whole Bible, that says any thing good or bad of the whole Bible; so far is it from delivering this Property or Privilege of it: that is, the Property or Privilege of containing all things necessary to Salvation. And if it do no where teach this Property or Privilege of the whole Bible, neither does it teach it of the New Testament, which is but a part of the Bible. I may add, that there is not one Text in the whole Scripture that fays any thing at all of the New Testament as a part of the Scripture, or that refers us to it as a Book containing what is to be believed and practifed in order to our Salvation: For all the Texts that have been produced by my learned Opponent, or indeed that can be produc'd, requiring us to fearch the Scriptures in order to obtain eternal Life, refer us, as both Mr. Thorndike and I have shewed, to the Scriptures of the Old Testament only. Upon what Ground then is it that we receive the Canon of the New Testament as the Rule of our Faith and Practice? It can be only upon the Tradition of the Church, which has always received that Book as containing the Revealed Will of God. Therefore, says Mr. Thorndike, it follows, that what soever the whole Church, from the Beginning, bath bath received and practifed for the Rule of Faith and Manners, all that we affirm to be evidently rue, by the same Reason for which we believe the very Scriptures. That is, whatever the Church has deliver'd as constantly and unani-That is, whatever the moufly to have been the Doctrine and Practice aught by the Apostles, as it has deliver'd the New Testament as the Writing of the Apostles, bught to be received, because we receive the Canon of the Scriptures upon the same Grounds only. This he demonstrates from the impossibiity of a constant and universal Consent in such hings, without as great Conviction of the Will of God in one Point as the other. That in such variety of Mens Fancies, Reasons, and Inclinaions, the Church consisting from the beginning of Il Nations, and dispersed all over the World; bould of their own Inclination, not sway'd by any Information of God's Will, agree in the same Laws and Rulers, submitting to the Exercise of he same Power upon themselves; I may add sor ather explain what he means by the Word Laws gree to teach the same Doctrine, and to observe the same Usages in their Worship, is as impossile, as that the World should consist of the casual Concourse of Atoms, according to Democritus or Epicurus. And he farther demonstrates, that Tradition may teach what is necessary to Salvaion as well as Scripture, when he fays, That what soever it may appear ANY WAY that the Apostles deliver'd to the Church to be observed in t, that is, whether they deliver'd it by Writing or by oral Tradition, is a Law to the Churchs And if this may appear, then the Consent of this Corporation will be as good Evidence as the subest Matter allows, whether any thing questionable be part of it or not. ning, hath way of proving what the Apostles taught, it must be by the unanimous Consent of the Church, which is as good Evidence as the Subject will allow; and if the Church gives her Evidence that the Apostles taught any thing, it matters not whether the Apostles deliver'd it by word of Mouth, or by writing, the Evidence is still the same, and as much as the subject Matter allows: Whether any of the Points now questioned be thus evidenced, is nothing to the purpose of this Proposition. From whence, as he farther fays, this Conclusion clearly follows, that no Man can prescribe against any Rule of the Church, that it comes not from the Apostles, because it is not recorded in Scripture. And therefore nothing hindreth competent Evidence to be made of the Authority of the Apostles in some Orders of the Church, of which there is no mention in Scripture. And it is manifest from what goes before, and from his whole Argument, that it is to be understood of things necessary to Salvation: So that this Conclusion may be fairly drawn from his Premisses, which he has proy'd, I think, beyond any reasonable Contradiction, That nothing binders but that some things may have been taught by the Apostles, as necessary to Salvation, of which there is no mention in Scripture. Confequently our learned Author's Proposition is false, when he afferts, * that to teach any thing as of necessity to Salvation, which the Scripture has not taught at all, is to interfere with Scripture. Since the Scripture has no where taught, that all things necessary to Salvation are contained in it; neither have the Apostles any where said, + that they would or had put into writing, in some part or

Therefore I must say it again, that it is a false Suggestion in our Opponent so frequently to infinuate, as he has done, that those who would prove any thing to be necessary to Salvation by Tradition, which the Scripture has not taught, either set up Tradition in opposition to Scripture, or derogate from the Authority of Scripture. For as the Scripture no where pretends to have taught us ALL things necessary to Salvation, as Mr. Thorndike has proved as well as any of us, it cannot derogate from the Authority of the Scripture to fay that some things may be taught as necessary to Salvation that are not taught at all in Scripture, because to say so is not to say any thing that interferes with, or is contrary to Scripture. And if it do not interfere with Scripture, it is not opposite to Scripture. Does he derogate from the Honour of the Statute Book, who shall say that there are several Laws of the Land that are obligatory by Use and Custom, that we can shew no Act of Parliament for? Does a Man by afferting this, fet up Custom in opposition to the Statute Law? None is fo weak as to argue in that manner. And yet our learned Opponent's Argument for this Suggestion has no better Foun-We maintain some things as necessary dation. in the worship of God, which he conceives the Scriptures have not taught at all. We conceive we have proved them to be so by the Custom or constant Practice of the Church, which is commonly called Tradition. This he condemns as fetting up Tradition in opposition to the Scrip-Is not this just the same as to say that he who lets up any thing as a Law of the Land by Custom, which is not mentioned in any Act of Parliament, opposes the Statute Book. Now as it is allow'd on all Hands that Custom, how much foever it be the Law of the Land, must give place to an Act of Parliament; fo we fay as to Tradition, how much foever it be a Law to the Church, it must yield to Scripture. And as no Custom is of Force, or can oblige as the Law of the Land, if it contradict a Statute; fo we fay, that no Tradition can be a Law to the Church if it contradict the Scripture. But then on the other Hand, as every Englishman knows, if there be a Custom that does not contradict an Act of Parliament, though the Statute Book have directed or faid nothing at all relating to that Custom, though there be nothing of it to be found in any written Law; yet that Custom if it appear to have been so time out of mind, that is, if the Original of it cannot be traced, or any time affign'd when it may appear not to have been a Custom, shall bind the Subject as much as if it had been written; and yet no body ever faid or thought that so to declare Custom to be the Law of the Land, was to fet up Custom against the Statute Book; or that to say a Custom, of which the Statute Book had faid nothing at all, was the Law of the Land, interfered with, or was contrary to the Statute Book. And the Reason of this is plain, because though the Statute Book is most certainly the Law of the Land, and whatfoever is therein enacted lays an Obligation of Obedience upon all Subjects; yet that Book has no where faid that nothing else shall be the Law of the Land, but what has been made to be so by some Act of Parliament. we say that Tradition may be a Law to the Church, though it should teach something as necessary to Salvation which the Scripture has not

not taught at all, because though the Scripture has taught things necessary to Salvation, and what it has taught is the Will of God, and must therefore necessarily be obeyed; yet it has no where faid that it has taught ALL things necessary to Salvation. And to affert this no more interferes with Scripture, than to fay that Custom may be the Law of the Land interferes with the Statute Book. And as he that should give an Interpretation of an Act of Parliament contrary to Custom, and to all adjudged Cases founded upon that Act, would not be heard, though he might make the Words of the Act bear the Sense he puts upon them; so neither ought he to be heard who shall put a Sense upon any part of the Scripture contrary to what the Tradition of the Church has understood its meaning to be, though he might make the Words bear that Sense.

Therefore I must say it again, that it is a falle Suggestion * to say, as our Opponent does, that now we are taught to betake our selves not to Scripture, but Tradition, the Fathers and the Jewish Rabbies. For this infinuates as if we would fet afide the Scriptures, and prefer Tradition and the Fathers, and the Jewish Rabbies before it; which we have by no means done, although he had proved, as I think he has not, that the Scriptures have taught nothing at all concerning the Points we contend for. Because whether the Scriptures have taught any thing concerning them or not, we conceiv'd they did, and accordingly appeal'd to them and produc'd our Texts. Whether those Texts were to the Purpose or not, has no regard to this Suggestion; for he that

For how do we let these in opposition to one another, or give Tradition, the Fathers and the Jewish Rabbies a preference to Scripture, when we suppose them all to teach the same thing? We may be mistaken in our supposition, and quote the Scriptures to prove what they do not prove, but still we betake our selves to Scripture for proof, and therefore do not teach that we are not to betake our selves to Scripture. And if to endeavour to prove from Scripture and Tradition that which Scripture has not taught at all, is to teach that we are to betake our selves not to Scripture but Tradition, &c. how will our Author clear himself from the same Imputation, who has pretended also to prove from Scripture and Tradition that which the Scripture has not taught at all? That is, that + Scripture, and not Tradition, is prescribed by our Lord to his Disciples, as the Rule they are to walk by, in such manner, that if Tradition teaches any thing as of necessity to Salvation, which the Scripture has not taught at all, it interferes with, or is contrary to, Scripture; and pretends to have proved this also by a plentiful Tra-Now I have shewed that this Doctrine is not taught at all in Scripture, and the Texts he has produced are nothing to the purpose, fince if they are to be understood in an exclusive

For sure it is necessary to Salvation to know what is the Rule of our Faith and practice. However where ther he have been guilty of the Fault which he charges upon us or not, this is certain, that his Suggestion is false, when he infinuates, that in what has been written on our fide of this Controversy, we are taught to betake our selves not to Scripture, but Tradition, &c. because how unlucky foever we may have been in betaking our selves to Scripture, to prove the necessity of the things we contend for, yet in Fact we have betaken our selves to Scripture as well as to Tradition, &c.

Having thus, I trust, sufficiently proved that our learned Opponent's Proposition, when he afferts that Scripture, and not Tradition, is prescribed by our Lord to his Disciples as the Rule they are to walk by, is false, if it be understood to mean the only Rule; so that whatever is taught by Tradition, as of necessity to Salvation, which the Scripture has not taught at all, deserves no regard, as he explains his meaning to be: And that two very learned and eminent Divines of the Church of England long ago demonstratively proved, that Tradition might convey the Will of God to us as well as the Scriptures, and where it did so it was to be obey'd, though the thing required was not taught at all in those facred Writings; to shew that we had advanced no new Doctrine unknown before to the Members of the Church of England, or what the Divines of this Church had never taught before: And having also shewn the falseness of our learned Opponent's Suggestion, as if we had taught that the Scriptures are less to be regarded than Tradition, &c. I shall now proceed to return an Answer to such parts of his No just Grounds, &c. as are written against my self in particular. Not doubting but the other Gentleman, who is likewise opposed in this Book, is well able to defend himself.

Among the things wherein he pretends we are agreed, * the first is, that Scripture is given us as the Rule of our Faith. Thus far I own we agreed. But whether it be the only Rule is another Question. And here it is that he takes occasion to mention my Complaint of it as an undeferved Charge against those of our side, that Christians are now directed by us, to betake themselves not to Scripture but Tradition, &c. And fays, As to the Fast it is a falle Suggestion, the Dostor bas only afferted, but not proved. But I trust I have now proved it, by shewing that we have betaken our felves to Scripture, how unlucky foever we may have been in doing fo. And with our Opponent, I desire the impartial Reader to tast bis Eye over both the + Reasons and Defence, and then declare freely to the World whether the Scripture is not appealed to in both, especially the latter, whether pertinently or not is not to the purpose. And he that appeals to the Scripture, cannot be faid to teach that we are NOT to betake felf so as to shew he has not a regard to it as the Word of God, but only cites it as a Book of mere human Authority, which I am sure the Author he reslects on has not done. However, says our learned Opponent, If this be a false Suggestion, then the contrary Assertion must be true, that actording to the Dostrine of these Gentlemen, we are to keep close to Scripture in all Controversies, and particularly in that now before us, rather than to Tradition, &c. Very right where there is a Competition, or Contrariety between Scripture and Tradition. But that has by no means been proved as to the now controverted Points.

The next Agreement betwixt us, * according to our learned Opponent, is, That Tradition is to be made use of only so far as it is explicative of Upon which occasion he produces Scripture. my Words, We have taught no more than what the Answerer himself allows, that Tradition is of use for confirmints what is deliver'd in Scripture, though not so fully and clearly as some other Doctrines are. And + again, That nothing is to be received as an Article of Faith, or of necessity to Salvation, that cannot be proved from Scripture; which is in effect what is maintained by the Church of England in its VIth Article; concerning which he observes, that I have made this frank Declaration, which he begs may be remembred. This I believe the Author of the Reafons will readily affent to, I AM SURE I DO. But, fays our learned Opponent, How this will agree to the Necessity of such Usages as the Scripture no where teaches, will need some Explication. I will therefore give an Explication of it. The Scriptures themselves send us to Tradition, as * I have formerly proved. St. Paul fays, + Now I pray you, Brethren, that ye remember me in all things, and keep the Ordinances (or Traditions, for so it is in the Original, wwogdores, as the Margin of our Bibles has it) as I deliver'd them unto you. And again, * Therefore, Brethren, stand fast, and bold the Traditions which ye have been taught, whether by Word, or our Epistle. And soon after + he fays, Now we command you, Brethren, in the Name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every Brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the Tradition which he received of us. Here we see plain mention of St. Paul's Traditions; consequently of Apostolical Traditions deliver'd by Word of Mouth, as well as by Epiftles or in Writing, and a Condemnation of those who do not equally observe both. Therefore if a Tradition be prov'd to be unquestionably Apostolical, though it be in a Matter necessary to Salvation (for Matters necessary to Salvation are not excepted) it may very well be faid to be prov'd by Scripture, though that particular Tradition be not read there. Both because the Scripture does testify that the Apostles did deliver Traditions by Word of Mouth, as well as by Epiftle or in Writing, and has no where faid that those Traditions, which were deliver'd by Word, were afterwards put into Writing: And also has equally requir'd Obedience to those deliver'd by Word with those deliver'd by Epistle. Therefore I make no scruple to say, that what is prov'd to be Apostolical Tradition, is also prov'd by Scripture, because the Scripture expresly requires our Obedience to fuch Tradition. And if this be not allowed to be a good Explication, then the VIth Article of the Church of England cannot be defended by Scripture; for the Scripture expresly teaches that Apostolical Tradition is to be observ'd, but no where teaches that all Apostolical Tradition is written in the New Testament. And that I understood it in this Sense, when I made that frank Declaration my learned Opponent begs may be remembred, will appear in what I have here faid with regard to the Obligation of Apostolical Tradition, which is only a Recital of what I faid in the Book in whose Postscript I made this Declaration. I therefore make no scruple to affirm with the learned Dr. Hammond, as before cited, that Apostolical Traditions, such as are truly so, as well as Apostolical Writings, are equally the Matter of that Christian's Belief, who is equally secured of the Fidelity of the Conveyance, that as the one is Apostolical Writing, so the other is Apostolical Tradition. And as I am persuaded he did not think this to be contrary to the VIth Article of . the Church of England, neither do I.

He urges some other Acknowledgments of mine, as Matters wherein we are agreed. As * that if any Competition arises between Scripture and Tradition, no Question is to be made, but the Scripture is to be relied upon, and the Tradition to be rejected. And he seems to triumph in this as if it was all he pleaded for, saying, Than which nothing could be better said, and fuller to our purpose. And I can, and do assure the Reader on the other Hand, that the Answerer had never any Defign to discard Tradition, or encourage any one else to discard it, any farther than it differs from Scripture; and whensoever it does this, we are taught by the Reverend Author that it ought to be discarded, which is as much as any of us desire. Now if this learned Author by the words Differ from Scripture understood what I have expressed by the word Competition, then indeed there would be no Difference between us on this Head. But by differing from Scripture * he understands teaching any thing which the Scripture has not taught at all; which as I have already observed, and I hope proved, is not interfering with Scripture, or contrary to it, as he pretends it is: And is the grand Mistake on which all he has to say is grounded. But what comes in Competition with Scripture is plainly opposite to Scripture, and must contradict something contain'd in Scripture; for where there is no Opposition or Contradiction, I fee not how there can be a Competition. If I affirm what another does not gainfay, though he does not affirm it also, there appears no Opposition, no Competition between us. And this may also serve as an Answer to his other pretended Agreements, + where he cites me as ewning the Authority of the Scriptures as heartily and fully as himself, &c. And allowing that nothing ought to be taught contrary to the Scripture.

Another Acknowledgment of mine, which he calls an Agreement * is, That the Scripture is the Rule that we are stedfastly to adhere to, whensoever any unscriptural Tradition comes in Competition with it. To which he is pleased to add, even though it were the Mixture, Prayers for the Dead, &c. And I frankly declare, that if I could see it prov'd as well as asserted, that these are not only unscriptural Traditions, which I do not think has been proved, but that they come in Competition with Scripture, which I am well affured neither has or can be proved, I would most readily and freely reject them: But here the old Mistake or Fallacy returns, and that is represented as coming in Competition with Scripture, concerning which our Opponent maintains the Scripture teaches nothing at all. But I have, I trust, proved this is no Competition, because there is no opposition in any of these Doctrines to any thing that is taught in Scripture. For if the Scripture teaches nothing concerning these Usages, as our learned Answerer frequently intimates, then it certainly teaches nothing opposite or contrary to them; and if the Scripture have nothing opposite or contrary to them, then they do not come in Competition with Scripture. What comes in Competition with Scripture, must not only not be necessary, but it must be unlawful. For what is contrary to Scripture cannot be lawful, because it is contrary to the revealed Will of God. And our learned Opponent, over and over declares our Dispute is not about the Lawfulness of them. And his ingenious Friend, the Author of * No Necessity, &c. is so far from thinking them unlawful, that he fays, they are desirable, and would gladly have them restored in a regular Way. And is it desirable to have such things restored, tho' in the most regular Way imaginable, which come in Competition with Scripture, interfere with it, are opposite and contrary to it?

+ Our learned Opponent, after all the seeming Agreements that he has discover'd betwixt himself and us, finds the Difference to be still very wide, notwithstanding this Appearance of an Accommodation. And what wonder, when all his Arguments are founded on a mistaken and fallacious Principle, that the Scripture teaches ALL things necessary to Salvation: And that whatever the Apostles designed to be of universal and perpetual Obligation, they put in writing in some part or other of the New Testament? A Principle founded neither upon Scripture nor Tradition; for as I have shewed from Mr. Thorndike, there is not a Text, a Word, a Syllable in Scripture to prove it, neither can it be prov'd by Tradition, as plentiful an one as he pretends to have for it, as I thought I proved in my Postscript, and shall do it more fully as I come to his Exceptions against those Proofs: Neither is it capable of being prov'd by any Reason not founded upon Scripture or Tradition, because it is a Matter of Fact preceding our Times, which can be prov'd by Evidence only. But I must say I know no Evidence, that all things necessary to Salvation are contained in Scripture, except it be the Evidence of fuch Divines as liv'd not 'till 1400 or 1500 Years after the Scriptures were written. And I confess there is plentiful Evidence enough of them, but they plainly liv'd at too great a distance from the Apostles Days to be competent Witnesses in this Case. St. Paul indeed fays, * That he shunned not to declare ALL the Counsel of God. But that he put all the Counsel of God into writing, he no where declares, neither do any of the Apostles declare that any one or more of them did fo. whole Counsel of God was declared by the Apostles, yet there is no such Evidence of their putting all that Counsel into Writing in the New Testament. Therefore where we have as good Evidence, that the Apostles declared any thing to be the Counsel or Will of God, as we have to believe that the Books of the New Testament were written by them, we have as much Reason to believe that to be the Will of God, as we have to believe that to be the Will of God, as we have to believe they wrote the Books of the New Testament.

Having thus shewn the Reason of our Disagreement, that it proceeds from the false Principle laid down by this Gentleman, and which generally passes for a Maxim with our modern Divines, that there can be nothing necessary to Salvation but what is contained in Scripture: I shall proceed with my Opponent to consider our Disagreements.

The learned Doctor, * fays he, speaking of the forenamed Article of our Church, Says, We are for understanding it according as the Church of England requires us to understand it; that is, that when we undertake to prove any thing necessary to Salvation by Scripture, we do not interpret the Scripture in what Sense we please, or in such a Sense as we may put upon it without seeming to wrest it, but in such a Sense as is agreeable to the Doctrine of the ancient Catholick and Apostolick Church. To this my learned Opponent Answers, If he means only, that Tradition is the best Assistant to Scripture, to explain the meaning of it in obscure and difficult places, it amounts to no more than what has been agreed upon already. But if hereby he means, that any the plainest and easiest Texts of Scripture, such as that, I will drink no more of the Fruit of the Vine, &c. or that other, Do this in Remembrance of me; or others of the like Nature, are not to be understood according to their plain literal Sense, but Tradition must be baled in to put a foreign Interpretation upon them, here he differs so widely from himself, that I must leave it to himself to try what Apology be can make for it; yet if this be not his meaning, it is not an easy matter to give an Account how he comes to be fo concern'd to remove those Authorities the Answerer had brought to prove the Scriptures to be the Rule left us by our Saviour, and from whence we are to learn our Duty. I have, I hope, fufficiently shewed, how I come to be so concerned to remove the Authority be brought not to prove the Scriptures to be the Rule, which was never disputed, but the ONLY Rule left us by our Saviour; not from whence we are to learn our Duty, but from whence ALONE we are to learn it. I was therefore concern'd to remove these Authorities, because I believe the Principle to be false, and the Authorities to have been milapply'd. Then as to what he objects, that the plainest and easiest Texts of Scripture are not to be understood in their plain literal Sense, but Tradition must be baled in to put a foreign Interpretation upon them. I answer, that I am never for haling in Tradition or any thing else; I am not for forcing or wresting any thing, I defire when I see occasion to appeal to Scripture or Tradition, to see it fairly and clearly introduced without haling or forcing. And therefore as to the literal Sense of Scripture, where it feems plain, eafy, and natural, I am always for taking it so, except some very plain Reafon, fuch as the constant Tradition of the Church, interpoles, why I should not understand it so.

Therefore I think it proper to take notice of nother Text that seems as plain and easy as our earned Opponent's Instances, and yet he himself. am pretty confident, does not take it in its plain literal Sense; if he does, I desire he will let he know it, and I will publickly beg his paron for supposing the contrary. I have menion'd it before * in my Necessary Use of Tradition, 3c. and will here repeat it. "We read, + Supper being ended, or as Dr. Hammond fays it ought to be rendred, during the time of Supper, Jestis riseth from Supper, and layeth aside bis Garments, and took a Towel and girded himself: After that he poured Water in-Feet, and to wipe them with the Towel wherewith he was girded: So after he had washed their Feet, and had taken his Garments and was fat down again, he said unto them, Know ye. what I have done to you? Ye call me Mafter and Lord: and ye say well, for so I am. I then your Lord and Master, have washed your Feet, YE ALSO OUGHT TO WASH ONE ANO-THER'S FEET, FOR I HAVE GIVEN YOU AN Example, That ye should do as I have DONE TO YOU. Now here is a positive Command, given at the time he gave the holy Eucharift; and no Intimation given, that he did not intend it to be literally understood. How shall any Man that is guided only by the Scriptures, without any regard to the Practice and Tradition of the Church, distinguish between this and the Precept for celebrating the holy Eucharist? Why, may he say, should one be observed, and not the other? Do the Words,

Nec. Use of Trad. p. 89. † Joh. xiii. 2, &c.

Do this in Remembrance of me, imply a stronger er Precept than, Te ought to wash one another's Example, that ye fould do as I have done to you." I shall add, are the Words, I will drink no more of the Fruit of the Vine, Do this in Remembrance of me, plainer or eafier Texts of Scripture than, Te ought to wash one another's Feet? Why then, to return the Opponent his own Words, are they not to be understood in their plain literal Sense, but Tradition must be baled in to put a foreign Interpretation upon them? For my part I can fee no other way of answering any one that should ask me, why they are not to be understood literally, fince they are so very plain and easy, than by saying that the Church has never understood them in a literal Sense. And if our learned Opponent should make the same Answer, might we not say, Here be so widely differs from himself, that we must leave it to himself to try what Apology be can make for it? But if he can give another Reason why he does not understand these plain, easy Words in a literal Sense, beside the constant Practice and Tradition of the Church, he would do well to let the World know it. The Reverend Mr. Deacon has put this Point home to him and * demonstratively proved, that if he and those of his Communion do not wash one another's Feet, his own Opinion and Arguments will furnish this Conclusion, that they leave the Scripture, and set up Tradition as rather to be attended to. And therefore very justly applies to him the Words of St. Paul, + Wherein thou judg. est another thou condemnest thy self. And when this learned Gentleman has apologized for himself, and given his Reasons why those of his Communion do not wasto one another's Feet, I am verily perfuaded that will be a sufficient Apology for me, why I do not understand a seemingly plain, easy Text literally, when I have the Tradition of the Catholick Church to understand it otherwise.

His next Remark upon my Poftscript, * is that I fay, that Scripture and universal Tradition are always of one fide, and never had any Competition between them. Whence, fays he, it necessarily follows, that when any Tradition is not of the same fide with Scripture, as in the present Controversy, that cannot possibly be an universal Tradition. If by not being of the same side, he means being contrary to Scripture, as I suppose he does, then it is certain the things in Controversy are of the same side with Scripture; for if they were contrary to Scripture, they would, they must be unlawful, which he does not pretend they are: But if he means any thing else, by not being of the same side, when he explains himself, I will endeavour to give him an Answer.

† It seems the Author of the Appendix had observ'd, that the Answerer's Texts, which are brought to prove that Scripture, and not Tradition, is prescribed by our Lord to his Disciples, as the Rule they are to walk by, do all relate to the Scriptures of the Old Testament: Which being an Objection that I have farther urged in my present Discourse against my learned Opponent's Application of those Texts, I think it very proper to take notice of his Answer; otherwise it may also be pretended to be a full Answer to all I have said on that Topick. Our Opponent's Reply then to this Relation of those Texts to the Old Testament is, No wonder if that were all that were referr'd to before the New Testament was written; but this is no Evidence, that the whole Canon of Scripture was not still more to be depended upon, when it was once settled and compleated. But this is an Evidence, that these Texts are not to be understood exclusively, as he understands them, that Scripture is prescribed by our Saviour as the ONLY RULE; fince it is evident he did not intend those Scriptures which he prescribed, that is, the Scriptures of the Old Teftament, should be the ONLY RULE for his Disciples to walk by, because if he had, he would not even at that very time he referr'd them to the Scriptures of the Old Testament, have also given them farther Directions by Word of Mouth, and afterwards by his Holy Spirit direct the several Books of the New Testament to be written as he faw occasion for them. It is certain then that the Texts our Opponent has produced, tho' they do prove the Scriptures to be prescribed by our Saviour, as the Rule his Disciples are to walk by, yet they do not prescribe them as a sufficient Rule; for if they did, he would not afterwards have prescribed them any farther Rule, as he certainly has done in the Scriptures of the New Testament: But he fays, this is no Evidence that the whole Canon of Scripture was not more to be depended on when it was once fettled and compleated, And is more to be depended on a sufficient Evidence that the Scripture is our only Rule? I may depend more upon one Rule than another, and yet not make the Rule which I more depend upon my only Rule.

The Author of the Appendix says farther, Here is not the least Intimation against Tradition. To which which the Opponent replies, Nor is there the least Intimation for it, nor was it necessary there should be. The Answerer's Business was to shew, that Scripture was the Rule prescribed us: But this is a Fallacy, for this was not his only Business. His Proposition is, that Scripture, and NOT TRADITION, is the Rule prescribed us. And therefore it is his Business to prove, not only that Scripture is the Rule prescribed us, but that Tradition is also not prescribed us: Otherwise he does not prove his Proposition. And therefore if we prove, as we have done, that Tradition also is prescribed us, we overthrow his Proposition, how many Texts soever he can produce to shew that Scripture is prescribed us.

The learned Doctor, * fays our Opponent, readily grants these Texts do send us to the Scriptures: But then he asks, what follows from all this? Is there a Word in these Texts against Tradition? To which he answers: I do not say there is, nor do I want one, as I have just now said, our Defign not being to condemn Tradition, but only to keep it in its due Bounds, and to its just and proper Use. But then I must say, if these Texts do not condemn Tradition, and he does not fay they do; if they do not shew that Tradition can teach nothing to be necessary to Salvation, which the Scriptures have not taught, as they certainly do not, to what purpose are they brought? How do they prove his Proposition? As to the due Bounds of Tradition, and the just and proper Use he is willing to allow it, I defire him to shew where the Scripture has let it those Bounds, or where it has assign'd it that just and proper Use he talks of. The Texts of Scripture we have produc'd pre-

But the Opponent goes on, and fays, Whereas the learned Author of the Defence had produced some Texts of Scripture in favour of Tradition; and the Answerer had observ'd, that nothing more can be meant by Tradition in those places, but the Doctrines the Apostles taught the Christians, whether by Writing or Word of Mouth, the learned Doctor puts this Question; And did any one ever produce them to prove more, than that the Apostles taught some things by Word of Mouth, and did not put all they taught in Writing? Yet I am pretty confident be neither did, nor could take this to be the Answerer's Meaning. Whatever the Answerer's Meaning might be, this was what he faid, and I fairly quoted his Words. NOT TRADITION, is the Rule prescribed us to walk by; and in order to this Proof he quotes Several Texts of Scripture; and when he is told, that in these Texts there is not the least Intimation against Tradition; he answers, + No Scripture need be fought for to condemn it, fince it is not Tradition, if rightly used, that he complains of. So that the' his Purpose be to prove Scripture, and NOT TRADITION, is the Rule prescribed us; and we tell him, that his Proofs do not come up to his Proposition, that they prove nothing against Tradition, then that is none of his Bufinels, none of his Meaning. His Proposition is directly against Tradition, and the Texts are cited to prove the Proposition; but it is none of his Business to shew they are against Tradition, if rightly used, though there is not a Word of rightly used in the Proposition, nor does any one, that I know of, plead for Tradition not rightly used, nor yet for Scripture, if it be not rightly used; for Scripture may be abused as well as Tra-Since then his Purpose or Proposition. and his Meaning or his Business, are so widely different from one another, how should I know his Meaning otherwise than by his Words?

However now he pretends to explain his Meaning, and fays, Tho' before the New Testament was written, the Apostles might reasonably refer their Auditors to what they had verbally delivered, it by no means follows from hence, that they did not AFTERWARDS put all they taught, as necessary to be believed or practiced, in Writing. And I am apt to think the Doctor will not undertake to prove they did not. But I conceive it belongs to him that asserts they did, to prove that they did so.

† No just Grounds, ec. p. 15, 16.

That the Apostles did deliver some things by word of Mouth, which they had not put into Writing when St. Paul wrote some of his Epistles is most certain, there is Evidence for it: But whether they afterwards put into Writing all that they had taught by word of Mouth, as necessary to be believed and practifed, has neither Scripture Evidence for it nor any other. So that if I should not undertake to prove the Negative, yet it would not follow that the Affirmative may be depended on. Nay if the Affirmative cannot be proved, as I am persuaded it cannot, neither does our Opponent pretend that he or any Body else has proved it; that is, if it cannot be proved, that the Apostles put all they taught as necessary to be believed and practifed into Writing; then nothing hinders but we may believe that some things neceffary to be believed and practifed may have been transmitted to us by Tradition only. However let us see whether the Negative may not be proved in this Case; and I think I did prove it * in my Necessary Use of Tradition, &c. For I shewed that St. Paul writing to Timothy, + says, Hold fast the Form of sound Words which thou baft HEARD of me. Now what he had beard of St. Paul must be something which that Apoftle had delivered to him by word of Mouth, and not in Writing. And that St. Paul had no Intention to put these things into Writing afterwards, nor supposed that any other of the Apoftles would do it, is plain from what he fays a little after. ‡ The things that thou hast HEARD of me among many Witnesses, that is plainly, the this things thou hast heard me teach by word of Mouth, not what I have put into Writing, the same commit thou to faithful Men, who shall be able to teach others also. What occasion for this? What occasion for Timothy's Holding fast the Form of found Words, which he had HEARD? What occasion for his committing them to faithful Men, if they were already or AFTERWARDS to be all put into Writing? And certainly that Form of found Words, that which Timothy had HEARD from St. Paul amongst many Witnesses, was something necessary to be believed or practised, or the Apostle would not have given such a charge concerning them. Here then is the Teftimony of St. Paul, here is plain Scripture Evidence, that there was something necessary to be believed and practifed, which had not been committed to Writing, nor was intended to be written at the time of St. Paul's Death. For I must observe this was the last Epistle that St. Paul wrote, as appears from those Words in it, * I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at Hand. So that St. Paul, when he recommended his Tradition to Timothy of some things necessary to be believed and practised, had written all that he intended to write, all that ever he did write; consequently neither did put in Writing all that he had taught, nor was of Opinion that any other of the Apostles would put those things in Writing: For if he had been of any fuch Opinion, there was no occasion why he should recommend the Transmission and Prefervation of them by a faithful Tradition. If he or the other Apostles had thought fit to put the Form of found Words into Writing, there had been no need of Timothy's taking fuch care to deliver it by Tradition. However our learned Opponent * utterly denies this Doctrine, and begs that I will shew any one thing that the Apostles designed to be of universal and perpetual Obligation, and did not put it into Writing. But I see not what Reason he has to desire this of me again, when I had done it before, and he had not refuted it. I had shewed that the Apostle St. Paul had delivered to Timothy a Form of found Words, which he had not, nor ever did put into Writing, and which he required Timothy also to deliver to other Bishops after him: I say to other Bishops, because St. Paul requires it to be delivered to fuch as were able to teach others also, which I take to be the peculiar Office of Bishops and Pres-So that it was a Depositum, which St. Paul required to be committed to the Bishops and Presbyters in particular, and therefore there is no Question but the other Apostles delivered the same Depositum to the Bishops, which they also Ordained in their several Churches which were founded by them. That † a part of this Depositum certainly was the Form or Manner of administring the Ordinances of the Christian Church: And therefore where we find all Churches from the Beginning to have observed one common Form in the Administration of the Sacraments, or other Apostolical Ordinances, though we find nothing of that Form in Scripture, we may fafely conclude this was part of that Depofitum which was delivered by the Apostles to be handed down by Tradition.

Now I have shewed in my Discourse upon the Liturgies; Mr. Johnson has also shew'd the same in his two Books of the Unbloody Sacrifice; Bishop Hickes in his Christian Priestbood; Mr. Bingham in his fixth Volume of Eccessaftical Antiquities; the Author of the Reasons in the Reasons, &c. Defence, and Vindication, have shew'd that in the Ministration of the Eucharist, it was the univerfal Practice of the primitive Catholick Church to mix Water with the Sacramental Wine, to encharistize or bless the Elements with a solemn Form of Thanksgiving, for the Creation and Redemption of Mankind, which was accompanied with the Words of Institution, a Prayer of Oblation, with a thankful Remembrance of Christ's Death, an Invacation for the Descent of the Holy Ghost to bless and sanctify the Elements, and make them the Body and Blood of Christ, and a general Intercession for all Estates and Conditions of Men, and particularly for the Faithful deceas'd. It is true, the Liturgies of the several Churches differ in their Words as to these Prayers, and fome few, a very few, in the Order of placing the Intercession and Invocation, but they all agree in Sense; and that is as much as it is possible they should do in a Form of found Words deliver'd by Tradition. We know that even the Lord's Prayer, whilst deliver'd by Tradition only, was deliver'd in different Words, otherwise St. Matthew and St. Luke would not have written it in different Words from each other. if in to thort a time, as between our Saviour's teaching that Prayer to his Disciples, and St. Matthew and St. Luke's putting it into Writing, there was so much difference made in the Words of that short Prayer, though the Sense be the same, it can be no Objection against the Form tound found in all the Liturgies of the ancient Church, which were handed down by Tradition only for 300 Years, that it is differently worded in all of them, though the Sense be the same.

I doubt not but my learned Opponent will lay, this is a begging the Question: But I must answer him, that it is not begging the Queftion, but proving it. For having prov'd that the Apostles did actually deliver a Depositum to the Bishops in particular, which they were to transmit to their Successors as they had received it, that is by Tradition, it follows that fomd part of this Depositum must be the Form of administring the Sacraments, and particularly the Eucharist. Therefore the good primitive Bishops having received such a particular Charge concerning this Depositum, we cannot doubt but they kept it faithfully; consequently that Form of administring the Eucharist, which they all, faithfully kept, and unanimously transmitted to their Successors, was part of that Depositum, and thele things now controverted are what we find they all faithfully observed, and unanimously transmitted to their Successors by Tradition for 300 Years before any of them put it into Writing. So that though I do instance in the things in Question, as what the Apostles designed to be of universal and perpetual Obligation, and did not put into Writing in some part or other of the New Testament, yet I do not beg the Question, but prove it: That is, I do not defire him to grant that the things I have instanced in arc of univerfal and perpetual Obligation, farther than the Proof that they are so will reach.

However, an Instance may very easily be given of one thing at least which the Apostles defign'd to be of universal and perpetual Obligation, and did not put it in Writing in any Part of the New Testament, and that is the Canon of the New Testament it self. I suppose our learned Opponent will not deny, but the whole New Testament is of perpetual and universal Obligation; but there is not a Text, a Word, a Syllable in the whole New Testament, that teaches that whole Book to be of universal and perpetual Obligation: And yet no body doubts (I mean no body who believes the New Testament to be the Word of God) that the Apostles and Evangelists who wrote that Book, design'd it to be of perpetual and universal Obligation. However they have no where told us that they did fo. The Apostles and Evangelists indeed, who wrote the several Parts of it, have set their Names to some of them; and perhaps some Texts may be found speaking of some Epistle or Gospel as of univerfal and perpetual Obligation, but there is no Text to be found that fays a Word of the whole New Testament, or that teaches us how many Books it confifts of, and feveral Books in that Canon have no Testimony in Scripture, that they are of Divine Inspiration, or the Word of God. We have Tradition only to affure us of this; with relation to the three first Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, and the Epistle to the Hebrews, not one Word in the New Testament to certify us, that these Books were written by any one of the Apostles, or by any apostolical Men, much less that they are the Word of God, written by Divine Inspiration. We have all this from Tradition only; so that here is one thing, and that a very confiderable one, even the Rule of Faith, which the Apostles design'd to be of universal and perpetual Obligation, and yet they have not put it into Writing in any one Part or other of the

the New Testament, that they design'd any such

- Our learned Opponent * goes on, and fays, The Answerer baving shewn from Scripture, that the facred Writers prescribe us no other Rule of Faith but Scripture, be next proceeds to Tradition for it. But I defire the Reader to confider how the Answerer has shew'd this from Scripture, All the Texts he has produc'd, T by his own Confession, prescribe only the Scriptures of the Old Testament for the Rule of Faith, which he speaks of: But is the Old Testament then the only Rule of Faith prescribed by our Lord to his Dissiples? Yet all that he has prov'd from Scripture is no more than that the Old Testament is prescribed as a Rule to walk by: So that if those Texts are to be understood exclusively, and to teach that to be our only Rule, the New Testament is excluded from being a Rule of Faith, no less than Tradition. And if they are not to be understood exclusively, then they do not teach the Scripture to be the only Rule of Faith, and confequently are nothing to his Purpose. For if Scripture be not the ONLY Rule of Faith, and these Texts do by no means prove it to be so, then Tradition also may be a Rule of Faith, for any thing he has prov'd from Scripture to the contrary. Nay he owns also, that # there is not the least Intimation against Tradition in any of these Texts. Indeed he pretends to limit Tradition, and fet Bounds to it, that it shall teach nothing of universal and perpetual Obligation that is not taught in Scripture; but he does not fhew, or pretend to shew, that the Scripture has set any fuch Bounds to it: they are purely Bounds of his own making, or fuch as he has learn'd from modern Divinity, unknown to the Church for 1500 Years. Nor has he at all invalidated the Texts we have brought from Scripture, to shew that the Scripture it self sends us to Tradition. Let any impartial Person judge then, whether he has prov'd his Proposition by Scripture, That Scripture, and not Tradition, that is Scripture alone exclusive of Tradition, is prescribed by our Lord to his Disciples, as the Rule they are to walk by! Or whether, as he here fays, shewn from Scripture, that the sacred Writers prescribe us no other Rule of Faith but Scripture. For the Texts he has cited, as himself confesses, prescribe only the Scriptures of the Old Testament; and if there be no other Rule of Faith but the Old Testament, the New Testament is certainly excluded from being any part of that Rule, and the Scripture has faid nothing at all to his Purpole.

Let us fee now if Tradition will help him any better: whether that, as he fays, will shew that this was the Doctrine of the ancient Christian Writers. Of these, he tells us he produced Eighteen, out of which I have thought fit to take notice only of Seven. Very true, because I found nothing in the other Eleven that fo much as seemed to the Purpose, nothing against Tradition. Let Men recommend Scripture as the Rule of Faith, let them fay as high things as they please of it, provided they allow Tradition also to be a Rule for us to walk by, I will join with them. But our learned Opponent frequently forgets one part of his Proposition, and sets himself to prove the other, about which we have no Dispute. For we do not differ with him when he maintains the Scripture to be the Rule prescribed us to walk by, he cannot plead more heartily for that than we are ready to do: But out Differ rence is about those words in his Proposition. SCRIPTURB AND NOT TRADITION; so that he excludes Tradition from being any Rule for us to walk by, when he fays there is No other Rule of Faith prescribed us but Scripture. Therefore where any of his Authorities or Arguments tend not to prove this Point, but only to fet forth the Excellency and Usefulness of Scripture, without beating down Tradition, we do not conceive they tend to overthrow any thing we maintain. And this is the Reason, as I alleged in my Postscript, why I took no notice of Eleven of his Fathers. They had faid nothing to the Purpose, nothing that tended to depreciate Tradition, and therefore none of his Citations from thence bore any Relation to the Controversy. Neither did what he cited from the other Seven really and indeed depreciate Tradition, or confine it to the Bounds he and other Moderns have been pleafed to fet to it; yet forasmuch as he had represented them as doing so, I thought it proper to shew how he had misrepresented them: And that howfoever they may speak against those who let up Traditions for Apostolical which are not truly fuch, and declare fuch Traditions ought to be despised; yet they all of them pay a great Deference to all truly Apostolical Traditions, which the Catholick Church had ever received and obferved, and would not fuffer them to be depreciated.

The first of these Fathers, as the learned Opponent observes, is St. Jerom, and adds, that though there are six different Passages out of this Father, teaching that we are to stick to the things that are written; that what has not Authority from Scripture is as easily despised as proved; that those Prophecies are not to be received which agree not with the Authority of the Old and New Tejtament; and that our Lord's Commands are to be attended to, rather than the Sayings of the greatest Men; and that we are first to learn our Duty from thence; be fingles out only one as worthy of his Consideration. And with good Reason too; for what occasion had I to examine what was nothing to the Purpose? Did St. Jerom, when he faid, What has not Authority from Scripture is as easily despised as proved, intend that Tradition was to be despised? How comes he then, as I fhall flew presently, to argue so strenuously against Helvidius in behalf of a Tradition, which the Scripture has not taught at all? Could he think that Tradition was to be despis'd? If it was, why does he blame Helvidius for despising it? I could shew the same with relation to Jovinian, Vigilantius, and others, against whom he argues with Zeal and Earnestness, in behalf of Traditions, concerning which the Scripture is wholly filent, but that I am unwilling to swell the Controversy with more than is absolutely necessary to yindi-I say then, that when St. Ferom care our felves. fays, What has not Authority from Scripture is as eafily despised as proved, contains no more than what he afferts in the first Passage, that we are to flick to the things that are written, and in answering one I answer both. Therefore as I did answer this first cited Passage, and that Answer not being thought fatisfactory by my Opponent, I shall farther answer it here; I see no occasion there is particularly to answer the other. The other Passages have not so much as the Appearance of any thing to the purpole. For what Prophecies do we pretend to receive that agree not with the Scriptures? rather than the Sayings of the greatest Men? Or which of us has faid that we are not to learn our Duty first or chiefly from the Scriptures? But does St. Ferom fay we are to learn our Duty no where elfe, because we are chiefly to learn it there? When the Opponent has shewn how these things are to his purpose; how they prove that Scripture, and not Tradition, is the Rule we are to walk by, it will be time enough to confider them: For indeed I cannot at present see how they prove any thing against us. What occasion then had I to swell the Controversy by the particular

Examination of them?

Now as to the Passage which I did examine, the Words are these, Ut que scripta sunt non negamus, ita ea quæ non sunt scripta renuimus. This, I said, * is so far from being against Tradition, the purpose for which it was quoted, if it was quoted to any purpose at all, that it is really an Argument for Tradition, and shews that in St. Jerom's Opinion Tradition is to be adhered to, where Scripture does not directly affert the contra-Our learned Opponent fays, upon this Occafion, Here I must beg leave to set this Matter. in somewhat a clearer Light. And I readily agree with the learned Doctor, that Helvidius had taken upon him to oppose the perpetual Virginity of. the bleffed Virgin, as if she had had other Children after our bleffed Saviour, and that St. Jerom set bimself to confute this conceit of his, by enquiring into the several Texts of Scripture under which Helvidius had fought to shelter himself. But then I add, that St. Jerom having thoroughly examined them all, and shewn both by the Words themselves, and by other Expressions in Scripture, that none of them served the End for which they were produc-

We believe God to have been born of a Virgin, because we read it; we do not believe Mary to have married after her Delivery, because we do not read it. Which is as full a Reference to Scripture concerning the Matter in Debate, as can be desired, and is an express Declaration, that no Tradition is to be received that is not evidently confistent with Scripture. But how this is to the Answerer's Purpose, as he pretends, I don't see. Has he any Adversary that pretends a Tradition is to be received that is not confistent with Scripture? I am sure this is a Suggestion he has no Ground for. What does not contradict the Scripture, is certainly confistent with Scripture, and we have none of us pleaded for any thing that contradicts the Scripture; he dares not openly fay we have, but endeavours to perfuade his Readers that we have, by fuch unfair Infinuations. But as, I thank God, he cannot justify this Infinuation, or prove that any of us have in any manner whatsoever taught that any thing is to be received which is contrary to Scripture (for were the things we plead for contrary to Scripture, they could not be lawful, which he allows them to be) this Passage of St. Jerom is nothing at all to the Opponent's Purpose, if it was produced to justify any thing wherein we differ from him: And if it cannot serve that Purpose, it can ferve no Purpose at all relating to the present Controverly. For we have never maintain'd, that any Tradition is to be received that is not evidently consistent with Scripture: Yet because it proves this Proposition, and for no other Reason, he says, it is very much to the Answerer's Purpose. But I think it is very much to our Purpose; for if the Aniwerer

fwerer would stick to his Purpose, that is, remember his Proposition, he is to prove, not barely that the Scripture is the Rule for us to walk by, but that Tradition is no Rule, where the Scripture is filent: And that when Tradition teaches any thing as necessary to Salvation, which the Scripture has not taught at all, it interferes with Scripture, that is, is contrary to it. Now here St. Jerom, as we do, argues in behalf of a Tradition, which the Scripture has not taught at all, that is, the perpetual Virginity of the Virgin Helvidius, like our Opponent, argu'd that this was contrary to Scripture, therefore was not to be admitted; and in order hereto, heaps up a great many Texts of Scripture, which he pretends prove that Mary did not continue a Virgin after our Saviour was born. St. Ferom, as we do, examines the several Texts, and shews they prove no fuch thing as Helvidius produc'd them for. And then fays, As we do not deny the things that are written, so we reject the things that are not written. We believe God to have been born of a Virgin, because we read it; we do not believe Mary to have married after ber Delivery, because we do not read it. So we say, As we do not deny the things that are written; so when you pretend to prove any thing by Scripture, as Helvidius did, and, like him, tell us what the Scripture fays nothing of, we reject those things as not being written. We believed that Christ prescribed the Scriptures of the Old Testament to be a Rule for his Disciples to walk by, because we read it; we do not believe that he excluded the New Testament, or Tradition, from being a Rule also, because we do not read it. But the Tradition St. Ferom pleaded for, did not regard any necessary Point concerning either Faith or Practice, tice, and this our learned Opponent infifts much Though, fays he, a Tradition that is not contrary to Scripture, nor has any other ill Consequences, may be safely, and in some Cases piously entertain'd, yet bere is not the least Intimation that such a Tradition may make any thing a necesfary Duty, which the Scripture says nothing at all of; which is what the Doctor would be at, though in flat Opposition to St. Jerom. But how is this in flat Opposition to St. Jerom? Does St. Jerom fay, that if the Tradition he defended against Helvidius had been a thing necessary to Salvation, it was not to be entertain'd, because the Scripture had faid nothing of it? Where then is the Opposition to St. Ferom, if we should say, that Tradition may make any thing necessary which the Scripture says nothing at all of? I am sure it is opposite to what St. Jerom has said here. Father certainly argues for a Tradition, which the Scripture fays nothing at all of. He supposes it an Error in Helvidius to oppose it; but he makes no Distinction concerning the Authority of Tradition in Matters necessary or not necesfary. And if our Opponent thinks fit to infift upon St. Jerom's Testimony in this Case, we must use his own Words, As we do not deny what St. Jerom bas written in this Case, so we reject what he has not written. For here our learned Answerer would put upon us what St. Jerom has evidently not written. St. Jerom's Argument will certainly hold good against every Point maintain'd by our Opponent. That Scripture is a Rule prescribed by our Lord to his Disciples to walk by, we believe, because it is written. That Tradition is excluded by our Lord from being a Rule for his Disciples to walk by, we do not believe, because we read no such Exclusion in Scripture.

Scripture. Neither do we believe, that if Tradition teaches any thing as of necessity to Salvation, which the Scripture has not taught at all, it interferes with Scripture, because we do not read it. Neither do we believe that the Apostles put into Writing all that they defign'd to be of perpetual and univerfal Obligation, because we do not read that they did fo. Whereas our learned Opponent, just like Helvidius, endeavours to put upon us that which is not written in Scripture, as if it was there written, though in flat Oppofition to St. Ferom, whom he appeals to on this Occasion. And therefore I shall venture to say it again, that this Passage of St. Jerom is so far from being against Tradition, that it is really an Argument for Tradition; and shews, that in St. Jerom's Opinion, Tradition is to be adher'd to when the Scripture does not directly affert the contrary. And I shall add, that this Father does no where limit Tradition to things that are not necessary, or any where intimate that Tradition cannot make any thing a necessary Duty, which the Scripture says nothing at all of; so that our Opponent, otherwise than by Misrepresentation, can never make him to speak of his side. think it very plain that he is of ours, fince he teaches that Tradition is to be adher'd to, where it does not contradict the Scripture, and does not limit it, as our learned Opponent does to things that are not necessary.

In the next place * our learned Opponent tells us, That the Answerer had observ'd from Ircnæus, that he promises to disprove the Tenents of the Hereticks from Scripture: That he says of the Gospel, the Apostles deliver'd it in the Scriptures to be the Foundation and Pillar of our Faith; and complains of the Hereticks, that being confuted out of Scripture, they set themselves to accuse the Scripture; and in (bort, he blames them for depending more upon Tradition than they did upon the Word of God. I defire to know where it is that Irenaus diffinguishes between Tradition and the Word of God. May not the Word of God be deliver'd by Tradition? Was it not deliver'd by Tradition for above two thousand Years, from Adam to Mofes? For Instance; Was the Promise God made to Adam concerning Christ, that the Seed of the Woman should break the Serpent's Head, less the Word of God, before it was written by Moses, than afterwards? This is another cunning Suggestion, as if those who maintain'd that Tradition may teach things necessary to Salvation, in fome Matters wherein the Scripture is filent, had taught that something may be necessary to Salvation which is not the Word of God. But I must acquaint the Reader, that we do not believe any thing to be necessary to be deliver'd or observ'd in Matters of Religion, but as we believe it to be the Word of God; that is, as we believe it to have been required of God's revealed Will. Only we fay, that as that revealed Will was transmitted by Tradition only for above two thousand Years; so, for ought appears to the contrary, some part of it may still be transmitted. Consequently, where we have sufficient Evidence that any part of God's revealed Will has been fo convey'd to us, we think our felves bound to receive it as God's Word, though it be not written in Scripture, there being nothing in the whole Scripture teaching us that every part of God's. Word is there written. Our learned Opponent, when he first quoted Irenaus, kept to the Word Scripture, Scripture, therefore I had no occasion to make this Observation before; but now he has thought fit to change his Phrase, and make Tradition opposite to the Word of God, as if God's Word could not be convey'd to us by Tradition, I thought necessary to take notice of it, and shew that he had no Grounds for that Variation of his Phrase. But what I answer'd then to these Citations from Irenaus was this, To what purpose these Passages are cited I know not, unless it be to suggest, that those that oppose him deny the Divine Authority of the Scriptures. Upon which he fays, that he cited these Passages to shew that Irenæus long ago looked upon Scripture as the Rule of our Faith, and the proper Instrument for the deciding the Debates that arise amongst us; and that our Duty is to be learned from hence, but not from Tradition without Scripture. Now I must tell our learned Opponent again, that we never denied Scripture to be a proper Instrument to decide Debates in the Religion; but we are not therefore for excluding Tradition, if that happens to speak plainly and clearly, even where the Scripture is filent. Nor do I find one Word in any Passage he has cited from Ireneus, wherein he fays, either in express Words, or by fair Consequence, that our Duty is to be learned from Scripture alone, and not from Tradition without Scripture, or in any Matter wherein the Scripture is filent; which is what our Opponent maintains and alleges him to fay. So far from it, that I observ'd that Irenaus says, What if the . Apostles had left us no Scripture at all, ought we not to have followed the Order of that Tradition, which they deliver'd to those to whom they committed the Churches? To which our learned Opponent replies, Who doubts this? If we had had no Scriptures transmitted to us, without question it had been our Duty to make use of the best Light that could be got without them: But the Doctor will not say, our having the Scriptures to consult on all occasions does not quite alter the Case. But he should first prove, that we have the Scriptures to consult upon ALL occasions; that is, that whatsoever the Apostles design'd to be of universal and perpetual Obligation, they actually did put in Writing in some part or other of the New Testament. I have shew'd from St. Paul that this was not done in his Life time, because, in the very last Epistle that he wrote, he expresly speaks of a Form of found Words, which he had not committed to Writing, which he charges Timothy to keep and commit to faithful Men, who may be able to teach others also. And I have also shew'd, both here and in my Discourse * of the Necessary Use of Tradition, &c. that the ancient Liturgies, or the Form of administring Divine Ordinances, was a part of that Form of found Words. And it does not appear, that this Form of found Words was committed to Writing by any other of the Apostles after St. Paul's Death, or that it was afterwards put into any part of the New Testament. I shall observe farther, that St. Paul's Writings make a very confiderable part of the New Testament, that he is more particular than any other in the Account given of the Institution of the holy Eucharist, and how it was to be administred; and not one Book of the New Teltament, which was written after his Death. so much as mentions that Sacrament; Yet even he had not put all that he had taught concerning that Matter in Writing, but deliver'd a Form of found Words, a Form of administring Divine Ordinances by Tradition. It is certain the whole Form of administring the Eucharist, which the Apostles design'd to be of universal and perpetual Obligation, is not put in Writing in any part of the New Testament. And therefore our having the Scriptures to consult (I can't say on ALL Occasions, because on some Occasions they may be filent) has not fo quite alter'd the Case, but that it is still our Duty, where they are filent, to make use of the best Light that can be got without them. Our learned Opponent also says, that when Irenæus sends us to Tradition, be speaks of determining a Question of small Importance, and by consequence no necessary and essential Part of our Religion. But did he therefore suppose, that if it was of greater Importance, and necessary, and essential to Religion, Tradition was not to be regarded. was certainly very far from Irenæus's Purpose. His Business was to refute the Hereticks, who denied the Fundamentals of Religion: And he urges against them the Tradition of the Churches founded by the Apostles, and argues, that tho' it was in a Question of small Importance, they ought to be determin'd by fuch Tradition; much rather in Matters of greater Importance, and which were a necessary and essential Part of Religion; the Tradition of which those Churches would be fure to preserve with more than ordinary care. It was plainly for this Reason, that Irenaus mentions a Question of small Importance, not that he thought, as our learned Opponent would infer, that Tradition was not to be adher'd to in Matters of greater concern; but that, if Tradition ought to be attended to in smaller Matters, it should much rather be attended to in greater. And who ligid at a fays posti fractit it is

And therefore he observes, that those Nations, who had receiv'd and preserv'd the Christian Religion by Tradition only, without any Scriptures at all, had no Hereticks amongst them. Thus, says he, by means of that old Tradition of the Appostles, they admit not so much as a Thought of those strange things taught by the Hereticks: So that it is evident, he allow'd as much to the Testimony of Tradition, in Matters of the greatest Importance, as in smaller Matters. I could in the same manner proceed to examine his other Citations from the Fathers, and thew that they have all spoke of our side the Question rather than of his; but I shall at prefent forbear for the following Reasons. First, because, I fear I may swell this Answer too much; it being already larger than I at first proposid. In the next place our learned Opponent having by no means proved his Proposition from Scripture, (fince the Texts he has produced do as much exclude the New Testament from being a Rule to us as they do Tradition) if the Fathers spoke never fo clearly for him it would fignify nothing; because it would be contrary to his Proposition to believe, that Tradition can make that necessary, which the Scriptures have not taught at all: For if his Proposition, that Scripture and not Tradition; that is, Scripture without Tradition, and exclusive of it, is prescribed by our Lord to his Disciples, as the Rules they are to walk by; if it cannot be proved from Scripture, as I have shewed it cannot, all the Proofs that can possibly be mustered up from the Fathers can be of no service to him, because the Proposition it self excludes them. But the principal and chief Reason why I shall

I shall not give my felf any farther trouble to examine the Paffages he has produced from the Fathers, is because I am very willing to grant him that they do declare for the fufficiency of the Scriptures; but then it must be granted, that they do also press the necessity of adhering to Tradition, even though it be in Matters which the Scriptures have not taught at all: And this is done by the very fame Fathers, as (not to heap up new and unnecessary Citations from them) I shall thew particularly in St. Bafil, cited both by my learned Opponent and my felf. * He cites him as faying, that It is a manifest Falling from the Faith, and a great Instance of Pride, either to set afide any thing of those that are Written, or to introduce any of the things that are not Written. With feveral other Paffages to the fame purpose. And I have also cited him as saying as much also as we can defire in behalf of Tradition. + Particularly this, These Decrees and Declarations are commanded in written Dostrine: But we receive the others as given to us in Mystery from the Tradition of the Apostles, which are both of THE SAME OBLIGATION with regard to Godliness. But no Body contradicts thefe, who has the least Experience of Ecclesiastical Institutions. For if we reject the unwritten Customs, as of no great Authority, we shall imprudently do an Injury to the Gospel it felf, or rather bring what is there taught to a bare Name. Therefore instead of barely urging fuch feemingly different Passages of the Fathers, one against another, of which many might be heaped up, I shall choose to decline that Method, and only shew how these Passages are to be reconciled; that so the Reader may not run away with a Notion that the Fathers contradict one another, and several of them themselves also, and thence be induced to think them not worthy of credit in any thing they say, but may learn indeed what was their real Sentiment in the Point now disputed, and thence judge whether speaks most agreeably to their Opinion, we or our Opponent. And in considering these two Passages of St. Basil, we examine all that is said by the Fathers on both sides of the Question; the other Fathers, as I am ready to prove, if our Opponent should deny it, saying what is equivalent to both these seemingly opposite Passages of this Father.

Now I did upon this occasion set the Opinion of St. Bafil in a clear Light, and consequently of the other Fathers who had spoken as he did; and that the Reader may see whether our Opponent or we speak according to the real Sentiments of the Fathers, I will shew what both he and I have faid concerning what has been cited from St. Basil. He says, * with regard to this Father's laying, That both written and unwritten Traditions are of equal Obligation, that he shall make no other Reply to it but this, Either this Doctrine is well consistent with what this and the other Fathers have taught about taking Scripture for our only sure Rule, or it is not. If it be, I have no need to concern my self about it. If it be not, but shews this Father to clash both with himself, and with others of the ancient Writers; this is the worst way in the World for recommending their Traditions as Infallible, and for this Reason. so far as it holds, it tends only to prove the contrary. The same may be said likewise of what is alleged from Epiphanius, St. Augustine, and St.

Chrysostom. Consequently it is very indifferent to him whether the Fathers are to be reconciled or not, whether they fpeak agreeably to themselves or one another. So he can overthrow our Opinion, he cares not what becomes of his own Proposition; which I have shewed is not to be proved by Scripture, at least that he has not proved it from thence; and if the Fathers clash so with themselves and one another, that there is no dependence upon what they fay, their Declarations in Favour of his Proposition are worth nothing. Nay what will become of the Canon of Scripture it felf, which he owns * has no other Evidence but Tradition? Therefore if he had no regard for his own Proposition, but was willing to part with it so he might get an Advantage of us; yet I am forry to find he can fo eafily give up the Canon of Scripture, by representing Tradition, its only Evidence, as a thing that deserves no regard: For if the Fathers that have handed this Tradition to us clash with one another, what regard is due to their Traditions? But suppose the Fathers may be reconciled to one another, and it may be shewed that they do not clash in this Matter, but speak confiftently with themselves and one another: Then it seems he has no need to concern himself about it. This is very strange: Is it necessary that if they are to be reconciled, it must be in Fayour of his Opinion? He had no occasion to think so, if he would have vouchfafed to have confidered what I have faid on this Matter. I defire to know if the very fame Answer would not serve us as well as it does him. Instance of Pride, either to set aside any thing of those that are written, or to introduce any of the things that are not written, is well confiftent with what this and the other Fathers have taught about written and unwritten Traditions as of equal-Force, or it is not. If it be, we have no need to concern our felves about it. If it be not, but shews this Father to clash both with himself and with others of the ancient Writers; this is the worst way in the World to prove his Proposition from the Tradition of the Fathers or their unanimous Testimony. Nay, if the Fathers thus clash with themselves and one another in the Testimony they give concerning our Adherence to Scripture and Tradition, how shall we credit their Evidence for the Canon of Scripture it felf? Is not this Argument as full against him as against us? And does not he lie under an Obligation to reconcile the Fathers to themselves and to one another, as much as we do, tho' he' feems to think it does not concern him?

Now I had show'd how these Passages of St. Bafil, and consequently all the seemingly different Passages of the Fathers, relating to this Question, are to be reconciled; that when they spoke of Scripture as the only are Rule, they spoke with regard to Articles of Faith: When they spoke of the Obedience that was due to Tradition, and declar'd it to be of the same Obligation with the Scriptures, they spoke of the Forms of Administring the Eucharist and other Divine Ordinances. I was fensible that these two Passages, if understood with regard to the same thing. must be contrary to each other; so that both could not be true, and if I did not let the unlearned Reader see how the Difference was to be reconciled, and that when they spoke of the fufficiency fufficiency of Scripture, they spoke it only with regard to the Articles of Faith; when they spoke of the sufficiency of Tradition, even without Scripture, they spoke of religious Worship, and the manner how it was to be perform'd, he might run away with a Notion, that the Fathers were a Company of filly Fellows that taught Contradictions, that were neither agreeable to one another, nor yet to themselves; that not only one contradicted what another had faid, but that the same Fathers contradicted in one place what they had faid in another, and therefore their Testimony was not to be regarded. A Notion that I was fensible had too much prevail'd, and, if not obviated and shew'd to be false, must bring the Canon of Scripture it felf into question, which, as our learned Opponent allows, depends entirely on their Evidence : And yet notwithstanding such seeming Contraricty must neceffarily affect our Evidence for the Canon of Scripture, it is very indifferent to him whether it is to be reconcil'd or not. So that he may gain his Point, that Tradition alone is not Sufficient to make any thing a necessary Duty, which the Scriptures have not made fo, he cares not tho' he gives up the only Evidence we have for the Canon of Scripture. But I was cautious how I gave up for material a Point, and therefore shew'd that thele feemingly contrary Passages in St. Basil, and confequently in the other Fathers, were reconcileable, and faid, The Articles of Faith are clearly fer down in Scripture, and were taught to all, even before Baptism: But the Manner of Gelebrating the Eucharift, and the same may be said of other Apostolical Institutions, is not there, as St. Basil intimates, so fully set down; that was given in Mustery, as be observes; that is, in such manner fufficiency

ner as to be kept fecret from all that were not admitted to partake of it, for which we have many other ancient Testimonies beside this, as might be proved from many Paffages of the Fathers, if it were needful, and for this Reason, he says, was deliver'd by Tradition only; for had it been put into Writing, it might have come into the Hands of the Heathen, or others from whom they thought proper to have it conceard. And this Tradition be afferts to be of equal Obligation with the written Word. So I did reconcile the Ancients to themfelves and to one another, in reconciling thefe two feemingly contrary Passages of St. Basil, and thew'd, that though they did maintain the fufficiency of Scripture alone, as to Articles of Faith, yet they also maintain'd, that in Matters of religious Worthip, Tradition alone might make that a necessary Duty which the Scriptures had not made fo. And thus, and no otherwise, are they perfectly agreeable to themselves, and to each other. And therefore, when I had so clearly shew'd how the Fathers taught nothing that was really contrary to themselves, or to each other, in thele feemingly different Affertions, because in one Case they were to be understood as speaking of Articles of Faith, which they acknowledg'd were to be learn'd from the Scriptures alone, and that Tradition was only a fublidiary Affiftant to corroborate and confirm what was taught in the Scripture; and in the other where they faid, that Tradition made that necessary which the Scriptures had not taught at all, they spoke with regard to religious Worship. These Affertions being thus applied to different Cases, are very consistent with each other. And therefore, tho' this Doctrine be well consistent with what this and the other Fathers have taught about taking Scripture for our only fure Rule; yet our Opponent has need to concern himself about it; for being found to be confiftent, nothing can be more opposite to his Proposition, that Tradition cannot make that a necessary Duty which the Scriptures have not taught at all; these several Declarations of the Fathers, if confiftent with each other (as I have shew'd they are) being very contrary to it.

What I have here faid, I find confirm'd * by Mr. Thorndike, who has shew'd from several Instances, that the Fathers acknowledg'd the Sufficience and Clearness of the Scriptures, and that yet at the same time they represent those things as necessary Duties, which are prescribed by Tradition only. + He proceeds to reconcile them, and fays, " Allege they what they can allege " out of the Fathers, to shew, that they acknow-" ledge the Scriptures both sufficient and perfpicuous; I shall not be troubled at it, but " shall willingly concur to acknowledge the same. " ---- Confider now what is alleged on the other fide, how resolutely, how generally the "Tradition, both of the Rule of Faith, and of "Laws to the Church, is acknowledg'd even by "those Witnesses, whose Sayings are alleged to argue the Sufficience, Perfection, and Evidence of the Scriptures. Is it civil, is it reaconable to fay, that the Writers of the Chri-44 stian Church make it their Business to contra-"dict themselves, which no Scholar will admit either Infidels, Pagans, Jews, Mahometans or "Hereticks to do? Is it not easy to save them " from contradicting themselves, by saying, that Tradition of Faith containeth nothing that is a not in the Scriptures, but limits the Meaning of " that which they contain; Tradition of Laws " may contain that which is not in the Scriptures, for the Species of Fact, but is derived " from the Scriptures, for the Authority from " whence it proceeds? Or, is it possible by any other Means, reasonably to save them from " contradicting themselves?" Afterwards * in his Book concerning the Laws of the Church, he shews us, that by the Tradition of Laws here mention'd, he means Traditions concerning the Eucharift, and other divine Ordinances, for those are the things which he there ranks under the Head of the Laws of the Church. And + there he says of the Eucharist in particular, " I do " maintain, that the Order of Celebrating the " Eucharift, and the Prayer which it was from " the Beginning folemniz'd with, were from the "Beginning prescribed the Church by unwritten " Custom; that is, by Tradition from the Apo-" ftles, containing, tho' not in so many Words, " that it was not lawful to use more or less, yet " the Matter and Substance of the Consecration " of it, together with the Matter and Substance " of the Necessities of the Church for which " it was offer'd, as receiv'd from the Beginning, " was every where known to be the fame." Thus he not only reconciles these seemingly opposite Passages of the Fathers just as I have done, but also says there is no other way of doing it. And if it be fo, our learned Opponent, I conceive, has some need to concern himself about it, or else his plentiful Tradition will do his Cause no service.

In the next place my learned Opponent * obferves, that I fay nothing to what he had related concerning the Opinion of divers of the Foreign Churches in this Behalf: And scems displeased with another Gentleman for throwing them aside at once, as if because they were erroneous in some things, it were impossible for them to be right in eny. Now I must confess I took no notice of them for the same Reason that Gentleman gives for throwing them aside, + because our learned Opponent, as well as we, disowns their Reformation, and rejects their Communion. But why is this an infufficient Answer when coming from one of us, and yet an Answer to the very same effect, when coming from himself, is thought so full that he expects to bear no more about it? For. this is the Answer he gives to a Passage cited as from St. Jerom, That bow soever those Words are found in St. Jerom, they are only spoken as from a Luciferian. And it must be a bad Cause that wants the Doctrine of a known Heretick to support it. May not we answer, because the Luciferians were erroneous in some things, was it impossible for them to be right in any? I am well fatisfied this learned Opponent is not able to prove the Luciferians to have maintained more and greater Errors than those which are maintained by the foreign reformed he has named. Therefore he ought to think the Answer made in one case as sufficient as in the other.

But * there are two other Authorities he obferves I thought my felf obliged to take notice of; one is taken from the Author of the Reafons, and the other from my felf. I gave the fame Answer to both in my Postscript, which being not thought Satisfactory by my Opponent, I shall therefore vindicate. My Words are these, When we build our Hopes upon what has no Foundation in the Word of God, this is not Faith but Presumption. The Author of the Reasons had faid, of some Customs urged by the Answerer as mention'd in Scripture, that These Customs, the' mention'd in Scripture, are not mentioned as Commands, or binding Rules for Practice. Thereby acknowledging (as the learned Answerer supposes) that nothing less than a Scripture Command and binding Rule for Practice, can make any thing a necessary Christian Duty. To which my Answer was, May not a thing have a Foundation in the Word of God, and be a Scripture Command and binding Rule for Practice, though neither I, nor any Person living at the distance we do from the Age when the Scriptures were written, could have discovered it to be so, if we had not been ted to it . by Tradition? Here he refers me to my own Conscience, Whether I had any such Thought in my Mind when I first wrote these Words? To which I answer positively that I had. I did then believe, as I do still, that there are some things in Scripture which I should not have discovered to be there, if I had not been led to it by Tradition. As for Instance, I should never have difcovered that Episcopacy was to be learned from the New Testament; that is, that Bishops, as superior to Presbyters, are the only proper Successors to the Apostles in the whole of their Office, if I had not been led by Tradition to find it there: And if the Church had been govern'd by Presbyters without Bishops, during the second, third and fourth Centuries, I should not have found it there there yet. But being led by Tradition, I trust I have been able to find it in the Scriptures: And I suppose so has our learned Opponent also. For he pretends to be a Member of the Church of England, and that Church teaches, * That it is evident unto all Men diligently reading boly Scriptures and ancient Authors, not evident from the holy Scriptures alone, but the holy Scriptures joined with ancient Authors; that from the Apostles Time, there have been these Orders of Ministers in Christ's Church, Bishops, Priests and So again as to a thing's being mentioned in Scripture as a Command and binding Rule for Practice, I should not have known that the first Day of the Week, or the Lord's Day, had been mentioned there for that purpose, that is, as a Command and binding Rule for Practice, if I had not been led by Tradition to understand it so, there being not a Word in Scripture intimating that it is mention'd there with any fuch Design. So that I see no occasion for our learned Opponent's faying, that he does not under ftand my mean-Or how he can here apply his Maxim, that what is not and what does not appear to be, are to be put in the same Class. As if I had spoke of things that did not appear to be at all. Whereas I spoke of such things, which, tho' they did not appear to be by Scripture alone, yet by the Affiftance of Tradition did appear to be. And I defire him to shew me which of the Texts he has produced for the Observation of the First Day of the Week, teaches it to be a Command and binding Rule for Practice without the Help of Tradition? tisfy us that they do so, if Tradition did not difcover it to us? So that he might very well have spared the causeless Reflection he makes, as if I defired him to suppose some unknown remote possibility: whereas I desire nothing to be supposed, but appeal to plain Fact, as I think I have shewed it to be in these two Instances. But befide this which I have here faid in Vindication of my former Answer, I will now give him another to fatisfy him, or at least the impartial Reader, that what I then faid is reconcileable to my present Doctrine and Practice. I said, that To build our Hopes upon what has no Foundation in the Word of God, is not Faith but Presumption. Have I taught that we may build our Hopes upon any thing that wants a Foundation there? I am pretty certain I have not. How then have I taught any thing contrary to my former Affertion? But it does not follow, that because I am not to build my Hopes upon what has no Foundation in the Word of God, that therefore I am bound to no Duty not expresly required in Scripture. Our Opponent himself allows that the Observation of the Lord's Day has a Foundation in Scripture, though I am fure he can produce no Command for it. Besides, I have shewed that the Ancients, as well as I and Mr. Thorndike, plainly distinguished betwixt Matters of Faith, and Matters of Practice or Religious Wor-And though they would not admit Trathip. dition to prescribe any thing as necessary in a Matter of Faith, they nevertheless maintained that Tradition might teach some things which the Scripture had not taught in Matters of Practice: Which notwithstanding have their Foundation also in Scripture from the general Rules there given concerning them, tho' fome particulars are left to be handed by Tradition. Again. the Author of the Reasons says, These Customs, though mentioned in Scripture, are not mentioned as Commands and binding Rules for Practice. These Words the Answerer says, necessarily imply that nothing less than a Scripture Command and binding Rule for Practice, can make any thing a netessary Christian Duty. But I cannot see that they necessarily imply any such thing. All that they do necessarily imply is, that the bare mention of any thing in Scripture is not sufficient to make it a necessary Duty; but if it had been mention'd as a Command it would be fo, but does by no means necessarily, or indeed at all, imply that it might not be made a necessary Duty by Tradition, which did not here come into the Question.

After this * my learned Opponent fays, that Though the sufficiency of Scripture, and its being the Rule of Faith has been freely acknowledged, the Doctor intimates it to be his Opinion, that we live at too great a distance from the Age wherein the Scriptures were written, to know what Duties are taught by them, and must have recourse therefore to Tradition, to learn what they were defigned to teach us, and to pick up a good part of our Duty only from thence. As if Christianity were a Religion intended only for the learned Part of the World, and none may hope to know even so much as what is of necessity to Salvation, unless such as have time enough to spare, and are willing to spend the chief part of their Days, or perhaps the whole of them, in finding out what they ought to have made the great Bufiness of their Lives to practise. This is pretty good Declamation, but very poor

Arguing. It is matter of Fact that the Scriptures themselves, as written by the divine Pen-men, are to be had in dead Languages only, which are understood by none but the learned Part of the World! But does God's ordering this by his Providence look as if he intended Christianity in these latter Ages should be a Religion only for the learned part of the World, fince by his Providence he has fo order'd it, that only they can read the Scriptures as they were deliver'd by the divine Pen-men? The only Answer that can be made to this, is, that God intended, when the Languages wherein the Scriptures were originally written should be no longer vulgar, they should be translated by learned Men into the vulgar Languages: But then in this Case the Unlearned must depend upon the Skill and Integrity of the Learned for the Scriptures themselves; that is, for a faithful Translation of them, fince without a Translation they cannot confult them, or learn any thing from them. And fince these learned Men want Infallibility, which the holy Pen-men had; how shall the Unlearned know whether the Translators have not either ignorantly or inadvertently, or even defignedly given them a wrong Sense of the Scriptures? How shall they know where they may depend on their Translation, and where they may not, even in material Points, and in Matters necessary to Salvation? Thus to give an Instance of an inadvertent Passage in our own English Bible, that very Passage which our Opponent * produces to prove the Necessity of Infant Baptism. Our Translation fays, + Go ye therefore and TEACH all Nations, baptizing them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoft: TEACHING them to observe ALL things what soever I have commanded you. From this Passage, as it thus stands in our English Bible, there is a numerous Sect amongst us that argue Infants to be plainly excluded from Baptism, because they are uncapable of being taught or instructed beforehand. They plead the Text is positive, that all who are to be baptiz'd, must be taught or instructed before they receive that Sacrament as well as afterwards. That the fame Word Teach is twice fet down, once before the Command to baptize, and once after it, to shew that it is as necessary before as after; and therefore those that are uncapable of being taught, are thereby made uncapable of being baptized. And certainly the Argument had been good, if our Saviour had really used the Word Teach before baptizing as well as afterwards, as our Tranflation intimates that he did. That very Word must have excluded those from Baptism, who were uncapable of being taught; consequently Infants could not be admitted to it by virtue of this Command. The Words all Nations would have been limited by the Word Teach, to those only who did actually receive Instruction, and must have excluded not only those who had refused Instruction, but those also who were uncapable of receiving it. But if we go to the Original, we shall find that our Saviour used not the Word Teach before Baptizing, but only afterwards. That his Command is, Disciple all Nations, baptizing them: And then comes Teaching them, &c. Now to disciple, or to make any one a Disciple, is not to teach him, but to receive him into your School or Family, in order to his being taught there; consequently our Saviour has not

^{*} No Necessity, &c. p. 26, 27.

not here commanded us to teach all before we baptize them, but to disciple or take them into his School or Family by baptizing them, that there they may be taught to observe all things what soever be had commanded, as they become capable of observing them, which makes a wide difference in this Case. For though Infants cannot be actually taught or instructed in their Infancy, being not capable to receive Instruction, yet they are capable of being made Disciples, of being admitted into the School or Family, in order to their being taught; but how shall the unlearned Part of this Nation see this? What must an unlearned Man do in this Case? If there be an Error in the Translation he can't discover it; and if the Original only is to be depended on, and not the Translation, and that Original is to be understood only by the learned Part of the World, it looks as if Christianity was a Religion only intended for the Learned: * And such Reflections upon our Translation of the Scripture, as not giving the true Sense of the Original, cannot serve to any other purpose than to unsettle Peoples Minds, and fill their Heads with Doubts and Perplexities, lest they should never be able to understand what the plain Words of Scripture mean. This is our learned Opponent's Argument against Tradition's teaching any thing as necessary to Salvation, which is not taught by the Scriptures: And we see it is full against the Scriptures themselves, and therefore cannot be admitted as an Argument of weight by any good Christian. It may amuse a little at first hearing, but when confider'd is evidently of no force.

God, who certainly forefaw that all this would happen, that the Languages wherein the Scriptures were originally written would become unintelligible to the Vulgar, and that there would be a Necessity to have them translated into known Tongues, as there should be occasion. and that these Translations would not always be exact and free from Mistakes, did therefore appoint an Order of Men, one part of whose Bufiness it should be to teach and instruct the People in the Daties which were required of them. For he ordain'd, * that the Priest's Lips should keep Knowledge, and that they should seek the Law at his Mouth: For he is the Meffenger of the Lord of Hofts. So that though Christianity be a Religion intended for the Unlearned no les than the Learned, yet God has so order'd it. that it is, even in things necessary to Salvation, to be taught by the Learned; and without fuch Teaching, I see not how the Unlearned should understand it. + The Eunuch read the Scriptures, but could not understand them without a Guide: God has therefore appointed Guides to instruct the Ignorant, and to teach those that are Unlearned, which it had been needless to have done, if Christianity had been a Religion intended to have been fully understood, even in things necessary to Salvation, by all that could read or hear the Scriptures in their own Language. Therefore it is no Objection against Tradition to fay, that if we make that necessary, we make Christianity a Religion only for the Learned, for the fame Objection lies against the Scriptures themselves: The same Provision God has made for the Unlearned in one Case, is sufficient

None but the Priests or Guides would be obliged to spend their time in fearching and examining what are Apostolical Traditions, and what are not to. Neither need they to fpend the chief part, much less the whole of their Days, in this fearch. Would they but spend as much time to qualify themselves for the Priesthood, as is commonly employed in qualifying a Man for any other Profession, or even a common Trade; they would eafily judge what Traditions have Antiquity, Universality and Confent to support them, and what have them not. For all fuch Traditions will certainly be found older than the Council of Nice; and all that the Christian Writers have left us, which preceded that time, may be diligently and carefully examined in less than seven Years: And for the Unlearned, they must receive the Traditions of the Church, as they do the Translations of the Scripture, from the Learned. of notand omel over

God himself has appointed his Priests to be the Guides of his People, and has threatned them feverely if they lead them amis; and therefore it is the Duty of the Priests, and ought to be their great Care and Concern to discharge this Duty faithfully; and if they do it not, they make themselves partakers of other Men's Sins, and must expect to be severely punish'd for it. "Tis true, this has not prevented Priefts from misguiding People committed to their Charge. And God himself complains of it, saying, * Ye are departed out of the Way, we have caused many to stumble at the Law, ye have corrupted the Covenant of Levi, faith the God of Hosts. Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the People, according as ye have not kept my Ways, but have been partial in the Law. Therefore when we find that we Priests, and even our Priesthood it self, is grown contemptible, we have some Reason to enquire if we have not offended God in this manner: Whether we have guided the People in those Ways of Salvation which the Apostles and primitive Fathers did, who were therefore honourable among the People, and will be fo to all Generations. their Guides mislead them? Or how shall they know whether they are missed or not? I answer, This Question affects the Scriptures as much as it does Tradition. They may know whether a Tradition have Antiquity, Universality, and Confent, by the fame Means that they may learn whether the Scriptures are rightly translated into their vulgar Tongue; that is, by enquiring of those who are capable of giving them Information in that Matter: But what if their Guides milagree? I answer again, this affects the Scripture as well as Tradition. The Learned have misagreed both in their Translations and Interpretations of Scripture, as much as they have done in the Matter of Traditions, which are Apostolical and which are not fo. And to confine the Knowledge of our Duty to Scripture only, makes not the Christian Religion more easy to the Unlearned, than it may be though we join Tradition with it.

The short of the Matter is this, the Unlearned must be taught their Religion by the Learned; the Nature of things has made this necessary, whether Scripture alone contain all things necessary to Salvation, as well in Matters of religious Worship as in Matters of Faith, or whether Tradition is to be joined with it. They must learn from their Guides what is the right Translation of the Scripture; they must learn from them what are Apostolical Traditions, which have the Consent of all Times and Places; that is, what the whole Catholick Church, for many hundred Years after the Apostles, has taught us to be necessary: And they need not blindly follow their Guides any more in one Case than in the other. It is indeed the Duty of the Priests to be their Guides, and to direct them in the Way of Salvation: And when a н Question Question arises, as in the present Controversy, or any other, it is proper for the Priests to give the People their Reasons why they would guide them in this or that manner, and each Man must judge for himself which it is proper for him to follow. according to the best of his Understanding. If he finds the Arguments on both fides are above his reach, so that he cannot form a Judgment for himself, or at least dares not depend on his own Judgment in the Matter, let him apply to some other Pricit, whom he has reason to believe is impartial, that will fairly answer his Doubts; but let him first ask, whether he has studied the Controversy? whether he knows what each fide has to fay? whether it be not a Matter he has never thought of or examin'd? For if he be a stranger to the Controversy, his Judgment is of no weight. The Blind will then lead the Blind. and we know the Consequence. If he says that, he has examin'd the Matter, and has formed his Judgment accordingly, let him then give his Reasons for that Judgment; and if the Inquirer thinks them fatisfactory, he must act accordingly 'till he fees better Reason for the contrary: But let both the Guide and the Inquirer too be fatisfied, that they are biaffed by no fecular Views whatfoever in the forming their Judgment, that they feek only Truth, and are ready to embrace it at all Hazards.

But, as I have observed before, it may be difficult after a Controversy is started, to find a Person that is perfectly impartial in the Matter. And therefore the safest Direction for the Unlearned, and those that dare not depend on their own Judgment in such a Case, is to take the Judgment of those learned Men who have written before the Matter was so brought into Controverfy, if any such are to be found. Or if they have written since the Controversy, have yet plainly written without any View or Regard to it, and feem to have had no Concern about it. And some such I have shewed we have in the present Case.

Thus as to our learned Opponent's first Proposition, That Scripture and not Tradition, is prescribed by our Lord to his Disciples as the Rule they are to walk by: And that it is so prescribed, as that if any thing be taught as of necessity to Salvation, which that has not taught at all, it interferes with it; the Consequence of which is, that the Doctrine and Practice of the Primitive Catholick Church lays no Obligation of Obedience upon us, and that without some Scripture Rule we are not bound by any Authority of the earliest Ages of the Church, which are contrary to the Directions or Orders of the particular Church wherein we live: The learned Dr. Hammond, (a Person we have Reason to believe well qualify'd to give his Opinion in this Matter, and who did not give it before he had thoroughly confidered and studied the Point, since he gave it not 'till he published a second or third Edition of his Book) afferts, * That if the particular Church wherein I was Baptized, shall by Authority or Law fet up that, which if it be not contrary to plain words of Scripture, is yet contrary to the Doctrine or Practice of the universal Church of the first and purest Times, Meekness requires my Obedience and Submission to the Catholick Apostolick Church, and not to the Particular wherein I live. And if for my doing so I shall undergo Persecution of the Rulers of that particular Church, Meekness then requires me patiently to endure it, but in no Case to subscribe to, or act any thing contrary to this Catholick Dostrine. Here then is one whom I think our learned Opponent himself must own to be an impartial Judge as to this Proposition, and one that had duly confider'd, and was well qualify'd to determine it. And therefore an unlearned Person, who cannot examine the Matter himself, may safely rely upon his Judgment in this Point. He will fay perhaps that this learned Person nevertheless lived and died in the full Communion of the Church of England, and pleaded for none of the now controverted Points as we do. But I answer, that it does not appear that he ever examined them, and made it a Matter of Enquiry, Whether the Church of England, and the Catholick Primitive Church, were agreeable to each other in these Matters or not. He was engaged in Controversies of another kind, and excellently defended the Church of England against Papists and Puritans; and tho' in his great Reading it cannot be doubted but that he met with fomething relating to all these Points, yet it does not appear that he ever examined their Antiquity and Universality. Therefore upon this occasion it is proper for an unlearned Person, who dares not depend on his own Judgment, to feek out for one whom he may depend upon as an impartial Judge, to fatisfy him whether the Points now controverted have that Antiquity, Universality, and Consent which we say they have, and which our learned Opponent denies. Which brings me to

His second Proposition, where he maintains, that The Tradition pleaded for the four controverted Points, is not so full and unquestionable as it is represented to be. That is, that they do not appear to have been the Doctrine or Practice of the universal Church in the best and purest times. Here the Unlearned have also another (whom I suppose our learned Opponent being a Non-juror, will also own to be an) impartial Judge, on whose Opinion he may depend, and that is Bir shop Hickes. For he says expresly, * In whatfoever all the ancient Liturgies agree among themselves, and every one of them with the Account we have in Justin Martyr's, and in the xii, xiii, and wiv. Chapters of the Apostolick Constitutions (which answer so exactly to the Celebration of it, as describ'd by Justin) that must needs be Primitive and Apostolical, and the consenting Suffrage, i.e. the consentient Doctrine and Practice of the ancient Catholick Church. Of this fort, amongst other things not controverted, he particularly mentions the neama, or Mixture of Water with the San cramental Wine, which with the Bread they of fered up, to God the Father. The Expressions of these Gifts here set before thee, these Gifts of which thou standest not in need in the Prayer of Oblation, and the Prayer in the Confecration unto God the Father to fend down his holy Spirit upon the Sacrifice to make the Bread the (mystical) Body, and the Gup the (mystical) Blood of Christ. This Prayer is expresly in all the Greek Liturgies, and virtually in the Latin, where they pray to God to fanctify the Gifts. Here are three of the Points contended for plainly declared by this learned Bishop to have had the consentient Testimony of the universal Church in the best and purest times. And he might have faid the same as to Prayers for the Dead, which is the fourth, upon the very fame Grounds, as even the Unlearned may be convinced of by reading the ancient Liturgies lately publish'd in our own Language, with my Discourse upon them. However, though he has faid nothing on that Head here, he has done it in his Controverfial Letters with a Popisto Priest, where it might have feemed proper to have denied the Antiquity and Universality of the Practice, if he could have done it fairly; but as he could not, he frankly owns it. The Popish Priest * had objected to him, that in the ancient Catholick Church, People in all Nations, not in Africa alone, as is now pretended, pray for the Dead. + To which he directly answers, Yes, Sir, they prayed for the Dead. And then explains the manner of their praying for the Dead just as we have done, and shews it to be very different from those Prayers which the Church of Rome has appointed for Souls supposed to be in Purgatory. Here perhaps our learned Opponent may also say, that notwithstanding Bishop Hickes was of this Opinion, he still lived and died in the Communion of the Church of England. Very true, and for that very Reason I quote him as one whose Judgment must be allow'd to be impartial; and for his Learning, Skill, and Knowledge in these Matters, that is also beyond dispute, no Man had studied them better. Whatever his Practice was, this is certain, he has determined very fully against our learned Opponent's second Proposition, That the Tradition pleaded for the four controverted Points, is not so full and unquestionable as it is represented to be: And his living and dying in the Com-

Thus have I shewed the Unlearned, who may be unable or fearful to depend on his own Judgment, where he may find Men of excellent Learning, whose Understanding in the Matters they determin'd is not to be question'd, and whose Impartiality is indifputable; and for the Learned they must be capable of judging for themselves. I can therefore only intreat them to fludy the Point, impartially to examine the Arguments on both Sides, fearch the Scriptures and the Fathers, and from thence form a right Judgment. And if all Priests would faithfully discharge their Duty, and acquaint themselves with the truly Catholick and Apostolick Traditions, by diligently reading the ancient Fathers together with the holy Scriptures, and accordingly instruct the People committed to their Charge in the Knowledge of all that was believed and practifed by the univerfal Church of the best and purest Ages, * as I have shewed the Church of England requires her Priests to do, the Unlearned will find no more difficulty to understand the Christian Religion so taught, than if no recourse was to be had to Tradition, and they were to be taught from the Scripture only.

I thought it expedient to be thus particular in answering what he says concerning Christianity, as if it must be a Religion intended only for the Learned part of the World, if recourse is to be had to Tradition to understand it; because though it be really as weak as any of his other Arguments brought against us, yet nevertheless if not fully confuted and shewed to be false, it may sway more than any thing he has faid besides. For all the World is sensible that Christianity was defign'd to be the Religion of all Mankind, of the Unlearned no less than the Learned: And thereforc if a Necessity of having recourse to Tradition would make it more difficult to be learned by the Vulgar, it would be an insupportable Objection. Whereas indeed there is no more difficulty in one case than in the other, if the Church had been always careful, as it ought to have been, to have preserv'd the Apostolical Traditions, and the Priests had been diligent in learning those Traditions, and instructing the People according to them. So that if through the Negligence of the Church and of the Priests, it has been difficult to discover the true Apostolical Traditions; this has happen'd only through the Fault of Men, and not thro' the Nature of the thing. The Vulgar lay under the same difficulty as to the Scriptures, when they were for several Ages lock'd up in a strange Language: And if the Priests had been, or yet would be as diligent to inform themselves and their People, in the true Catholick Traditions of the primitive Church, as they have been to render the Scriptures into plain English, they would, both Learned and Vulgar, better understand both the Scriptures and the Christian Religion than, I fear, we now generally do.

Next, fays our learned Opponent, * the Doctor proceeds to the Testimony of the Talmud, for which be argues in this manner: If the Scriptures were written in a Language that is now spoken in no part of the World, and we must learn that Language from the Traditions of those that have lived since. and even from the Jewish Talmud, as contemptibly as be is pleased to speak of it, then I do not see how we can know the most natural genuine Sense of our Saviour's Words, without the Help of those Traditions, or even the Jewish Talmud. he turns off, as if it was proving idem per idem; as much as to fay, adds he, If we must learn the Sense of the Scripture from Tradition and the Jewish Talmud, then we must learn it from those Traditions, and even from the Jewish Talmud. will therefore put what I faid into a categorical Syllogism, and then let the Reader judge if the Terms are the fame.

That Book which is written in a Language, that is now spoken in no part of the World, and which Language can now be learned only from Tradition, and the Jewish Talmud; that Book cannot be understood without the Help of Tradition, or even of the Jewish Talmud.

The Scriptures are a Book written in a Language, that is now spoken in no part of the World, and the Language of the Scriptures is to be learned only from Tradition and the Jewish Talmud.

Therefore the Scriptures are not to be underflood without the Help of Tradition, or even of the Jewish Talmud.

Now I conceive that a Book, and the Language wherein a Book is written, are distinct and different Terms; otherwise all Books, that are written in the same Language, would be the same Book. My Argument plainly runs thus: No Book is to be understood without understanding the Language wherein it is written, therefore therefore whatever Helps are necessary to understand that Language, are necessary Helps to understand that Book. Tradition and the Jewish Talmud are necessary Helps to understand the Language of the Scriptures; therefore Tradition and the Jewish Talmud are necessary Helps to understand the Scriptures. And now I leave it to the Reader to judge if this be proving idem per idem, as he represents it to be.

Then * he endeavours to vindicate himself from misrepresenting a Quotation from Bishop Walton, concerning the Talmud. I charge him as infinuating, that the Bishop represented the Talmud as deserving no Regard at all. He does not deny the Charge, but only fays, He can't imagine how what Bishop Walton fays, even as I have cited him, is to my Purpose: That he only fays, it is not altogether to be rejected, which may very well be, if but the lowest Degree of Regard may be had to it. But I conceive the lowest Degree of Regard is something more than no Regard. And the lowest Degree of Regard is sufficient for our Purpose. We desire to make no other Use of it, than to learn from thence the meaning of a Scripture Word or Phrase, † as we would learn it from a Lexicon; and can a lower Regard be paid to a Book of that fort? So that it is as much to my Purpose as I desire, if but the lowest Degree of Regard may be paid to it.

A little after he endeavours to vindicate himfelf from mistaking, in a Citation he had made from Dr. Prideaux, and says, Pray, good Sir, wherein lies this dreadful Mistake? You tell us Dr. Prideaux, speaking of the Jerusalem Talmud, says, This and the Misna being the ancientest Books the

And has the Answerer said any thing against this? If not, as most certainly be has not, what is be to be blamed for? And pray, good Sir, where do I fay the Mistake lies in your faying any thing against this Passage of Dr. Prideaux? I charge you with one thing, and you amuse the Reader with putting a Question to me concerning another. There is a Passage in Dr. Prideaux condemning the Babylonish Talmud, and comparing it to the Akoran, as written almost with the fame Imposture: This Passage you cite as if it was spoken of the Jerusalem Talmud, whereof the Doctor speaks very differently, and thereby give the Reader occasion to think that Dr. Prideaux meant that of one Book which he really faid of another.

However, having pass'd over the Mistake he was accused of, by seeming to wonder where it lies, and why I should lay such a thing to his Charge: He can guess at no other Reason why I charge him with mistaking Dr. Prideaux, but that, I suppose, my beloved Distinction betweent the Vine and the Tree to be taken either from the Misna or the Jerusalem Talmud, and therefore tax the Answerer with not paying a due Regard to these, fince he takes upon him to question this Distinction. But this is running upon a Point I have not meddled with; and he calls that my beloved Distinction, which though it may be sufficiently made good, I have faid nothing at all of; neither have I charged his Mistake upon his not paying a due Regard to the Talmud, but upon his citing a Passage of Dr. Prideaux, as spoken of the Ferusalem Talmud, which was spoken of the Babylonian. What I cite, as taken from the Misna, is only this, that it teaches us + that the Paschal Cup was a mixed Cup. And so much it certainly does teach, according to his own Account, which Dr. Wotton has given him; * Men, says he, do not bless the Wine 'till Water is poured into it, says R. Eliezer; but the wife Men say, they do bless the Wine before it is mixed with Water: So that both R. Eliezer and the wife Men are agreed that the Paschal Cup was mixed. And the same learned Doctor, as our Opponent farther tells us, observes, that Maimonides says R. Eliezer would not have the Wine blessed 'till it was mixed, because it was not fit to be drunk before; which, adds he, shews that that Mixture was only for prudential Reasons. However, this shews that it was necessary the Paschal Cup should be mix'd before it was drank, whether upon a prudential Account, or a religious Account, it matters not. I have not appealed to the Talmud to prove any thing more, than that the Paschal Cup was certainly mix'd at the time our Saviour call'd it the Fruit of the Vine, because the call'd it by that Name when he deliver'd it to his Disciples. And if it was not fit to be drank 'till it was mix'd, it was certainly mix'd when our Saviour used that Expression, because then he gave it to be drank. It is certain therefore from the Talmud, compar'd with the New Testament, that the Cup our Saviour call'd the Fruit of the Vine was mix'd. We none of us pretend to fay, that the Talmud alone will

But then, fays our learned Opponent, what if neither Misna nor Gemara, neither Jerusalem nor Babylonish Talmud, be concern'd in this Controversy? What then becomes of all the Noise we have had about the Jewish Idiom and Phraseology? Yet so it is. The Gospels, from which alone with St. Paul, we receive our Account of the Institution of the Eucharist, are all transmitted to us in Greek: But I observ'd, ‡ and if I had not done so, this learned Gentleman knows it well enough, that though the New Testament be not written in Hebrew or Hebrao-Syriack, the Language of the Jews in our Saviour's Time, yet the Idiom and Phraseology is, as all Expositors find and acknowledge, and even as an English Reader may be fatisfied it is fo from Dr. Hammond's Notes on the New Testament, where he will find that learned Commentator explains but few Texts without being forced to have recourse to the Jewish Phraseology. And Dr. Prideaux, as I there also shew, owns the Talmud to be of great Use in this Case. To say then that the New Testament is transmitted to us in Greek, and thence to infinuate that neither Jerusalem nor Babylanish Talmud are concerned in the Controversy, is a mere Artifice to impose upon a vulgar Reader, and unbecoming an Author, who ought to be concern'd only for the Truth.

He proceeds and fays, * Our learned Destor indeed urges from Dr. Hammond, that thefe Words [YEVVILLE & auxExx] fignify the Cup in the Passover peculiarly. But then be is not pleased to tell us, as he ought to have done, that this is not the natural Signification of them; nor that Dr. Hammond offer'd this only as what he thought a very probable Conjecture: Nor again, that suppor fing that Cup to be mix'd at the Time when the Blessing was pronounced, which can never be proved, yet our Saviour does not appear to have inftituted any more of it in his Eucharist, than what be particularly mentions, I mean the Fruit of the Vine; which St. Chrysostom rightly affures us, as has been noted before, and which every one knows, was not Water but Wine. Now Dr. Hammond does not fay this only as a very probable Conjecture, but fets it down as the only Interpretation that can folve the Difficulties that occur in this Text. Nor did I lie under any Obligation to prove the Points he mentions; it was, as I observ'd, sufficient for me to shew, that the Cup our Saviour gave to his Disciples was a mix'd Cup, as our learned Opponent must allow it to have been, fince he owns the Wine was not fit to be drank without a Mixture.

His repeated Request, that I will show any one thing the Apostles designed to be of perpetual and universal Obligation, and did not put in Writing in some Part or other of the New Testament, has been already answer'd in this Discourse. And therefore I proceed to his next Argument.

+ The Answerer, says he, had pleaded, that when our Saviour makes not the least mention of any thing more in his Eucharistical Cup than the Fruit of the Vine; and yet human Tradition is appealed to for making a Mixture of Water, of which our Saviour Says not a Tittle, as though it were as necessarily incumbent on all Christians, as the Wine it self, of which there is express mention: Here is a manifest Opposition between Scripture and Tradition, unless it can be allowed that Water and no Water, or a Mixture and no Mixture, are one and the same thing. To this, as he obferves, I excepted and faid, I can fee no fuch Opposition, unless our Saviour had used such Words as must necessarily exclude Water. And indeed I must say the same again, notwithstanding he is pleased to turn it off with something that may make it appear ridiculous, faying, So that according to my way of arguing our Saviour's instituting Bread only in this Sacrament, will not exclude the use of Butter too, unless be bad expressly forbidden it. For I did confider what he fays, * That a thing might be left indifferent, as well as either commanded or forbidden: And therefore if the Scriptures have left it indifferent, that is, have neither commanded nor forbidden it, Tradition may then make or shew it to be necessary without any Opposition to Scripture; unless it could be proved, as I trust I have shewed it cannot, that nothing can be necessary, or of perpetual and universal Obligation, which the Scripture has not taught to be fo. And therefore my Anfwer to that Request of his, To shew any one thing the Apostles designed to be of perpetual and univer+ sal Obligation, and did not put it in Writing in some part or other of the New Testament, is a sufficient Answer to all he has faid, or can fay to what I have maintained, with relation to this Point.

But fays our learned Opponent, + The Writers of the New Testament could not have been expected to pass over this Usage in silence, had it been then known to be a part of our Saviour's Institution. But whatever might be expected from the Writers of the New Testament, it is certain not one of those Writers has taught us all that is necesfary to be known concerning this Institution: And we have no other Affurance that all is taught by all of them taken together, excepting that Rule of our Opponent's, which I have shewed to be false; that The Apostles taught nothing which they designed to be of perpetual Obligation, which they did not put in Writing in some part or other of the New Testament. It is certain neither * St. Matthew nor St. Mark mention those Words, Do this in Remembrance of me, which are a Necesfary and Essential Part of the Institution; for unless our Saviour had faid those Words, it would not have appeared that we had lain under any Obligation to celebrate this Sacrament. ‡ St. Luke indeed does mention our Saviour's faying, Do this in Remembrance of me, upon his delivery of the Bread; but he takes no notice of them upon the delivery of the Cup, neither does he fay what that Cup contained, whether Wine, or Water, or any other Liquor. *So also St. Paul, tho' he is more particular than any of the Evangelists in the recital of the Institution, and acquaints us that our Saviour ordered not only that the Bread should be eaten, but the Cup also should be drank in Remembrance of him, yet says not one Word of the Liquor the Cup containedini Why then might not the Writers of the New Testament pass over the Mixture in filence, the it was then known to be a part of our Saviour's institution, fince it is so apparent that there is not one of them, who has not passed over fome necessary part or other of this Institution in filence? Therefore our Opponent's Affertion is not for felf evident as the fancies it is to For thole Writers, who every one of them fingly have passed over in filence a known part of the Institution, may very well be supposed so though taken altogether, to have done so also. And our learned Opponent's Expectation being founded upon fo weak a ground, cannot invalidate fo much positive Evidence as we have from Tradition. He adds, The Answerer had argued that neither the Apostles, nor any other of that Age, does, for much as mention it. And then lays, Can it be imagined, that God in his All-wife Providence would have suffered this, if the Mixture had been an Effential of Christianity, and by consequence bad needed fo early a Tradition for its Support? Let us apply this to the Canon of the New Testaments Neither the Apostles, nor any other of that Ages do so much as once mention it. And can it he imagin'd, that God in his All-wife Providence would have suffer'd this, if the New Testament be the Christian Rule of Salvation, and by consequence had needed so early a Tradition for its Support? But the Answer in both these Cases is plain and easy, the Question ought not to be, what we may suppose God might or would have done in fuch a Case, but whether the Evidence he has vouchfafed us is not sufficient? If the Evidence be fufficient, and what ought to fatisfy a reasonable Man, there is no occasion to enquire whether God might not have given us bet-(111) ter have at least as early Evidence for the Mikture, as we have that the Gospels of St. Mutibero, St. Mark, and St. Luke were written by those Evangelists, or that the Epistle to the Hebrews was written by St. Paul, or any other inspired Writer: Yet I nevertheless am fully persuaded that we have sufficient Evidence for the divine Authority of those Books, and am by no means like our Opponent for invalidating such Evidence as the Canon of the Scripture it self does not stand

raten altogether, to have done to alforested noque

Well, but it seems if Justin Martyr be an Evidence early enough to testify concerning the Practice of the first Age (which our learned Opponent, whether he thinks it proper to allow or not, has no farther disputed) yet he has actually given no Testimony */ concerning that Age. For Justin, he will have it, gives only an Account of the Ulage of his own time, which is no proof that the Mixture, which be does not fay was held effentially necessary even in his Days, was yet reckined to be form the Age before. But I conceive Tustin does testify this not to be only the Practice of his own time, but to have been derived from the Apostles, consequently to have been the Practice of the Apostolical Age: For when he has given an Account how the Christians colebrated the Eucharith, he adds, + For the Apostlesin the Traditions banded to us by them. which are called the Gospels, bave delivered that Tefus thus commanded them, Taking Bready giving Thanks, he faid, Do THIS IN REMEMBRANCE OF ME THIS IS MY BODY; Likewife taking the Cup, giving Thanks, be faid, THIS IS MY BLOSDS Which the wicked Demons have also taught by way of Imitation in the Mysteries of Mythra: For that Bread and a Cup of Water is put into the Sacrifice of him that is initiated, you either know or may know. This I think is a full Testimony that Justin speaks of the Water, as a necessary part of the Eucharist, in the Apostles Days, and as a part of our Saviour's Institution. For if what he fays concerning the somework wards the Traditions of the Apostles (as Dr. Grabe teaches us the Word fignifies) was to be confined only to what he particularly mentions here as the Words of the Gospel, and not to what he has faid before congerning the Celebration of the Eucharist, and particularly the Cup of Wine and Water, he could not have spoken of the Cup of Water in the Mysteries of Mythra, as an Imitation of our Saviour's Institution, if Water, according to the Tradition of the Apostles, had not made a part of the Cup our Saviour instituted. So again * in his Dialogue with Trypho, speaking of that Text of + Isaiah, where the Prophet fays, Bread shall be given him, his Waters shall be fure. He fays, In this Prophecy it is apparent that the Bread is spoken of which our Christ commanded us to offer in Remembrance of his Incarnation for those that believe in him, for whose fake he became obnoxious to Suffering; and the Gup which he commanded fuch as celebrate the Eucharift to offer in Remembrance of his Blood. No. thing then, I think, can be a clearer Evidence that Justin Martyr looked upon the Water as a new cellary and effential Ingredient of the Eucharif-

Since he could not otherwise have applied the Water spoken of by Isaiah to the Eucharistick Cup, which he says our Saviour commanded to be offered in Remembrance of his Blood.

Farther, he fays, * I take notice of Justin's vdato is neguator, and fay, I believe the Answerer is the first that discover'd this Difficulty. To which he replies in If so, I wish he would be the first that would give a good Solution to it. But what occasion have I to give a good Solution to it, when Justin himself has done it, as I before observed? but he thought convenient to over-look it. I will therefore, for the Reader's full fatisfaction, transcribe the two Passages as they lie in Justin. First then he says, # Prayers being ended, we falute one another with a Kis: Then there is brought to him that presides over the Brethren, τω weossors & adex φων Bread and a Cup of Water and Mixture, voatos in regulatos Which he having received, gives Praise and Glory to the Father of all things, &c. Then some time after * he fays, And, As WE SAID BEFORE, Prayers being ended, Bread, and Wine, and Water, olves ny odwe is brought: And he that prefides, o recesus, fends up Prayers and Thanksgivings with all his might, &cc. This is a plain Recital of what he had faid before, and what he there called Water and Mixture, he here expresly calls Wine and Water. So that if there was a difficulty in the former Passage, he has here explained it. And when an Author has for explained himself, I see no difficulty there is for any one che to solve it. justly make the fame Complaint of the Author of No Reason, &c. and our Opponent, that he does of Trypho and his Friends. ± For, fays he, like Flies, ye run and fly to fore Places; and if a Man speak ten thousand Words well, and happen to let fall one, even the least Word, which displeases you, or is not understood, or not so clear as you would have it, letting alone all the many things well said, you lay hold of that poor little Word, and profecute it without Mercy. Justin has clearly faid Wine and Water in more places than one; but he happens in one place to fay Mixture and Water; and the most evidently explains himtelf, yet this poor Word Mixture is laid hold of and profecuted, as if it made all that Justin has faid on this occasion unintelligible. The large view

The Doctor, * fays he, proceeds to the Reply made to 2 Thest. n. 15. Therefore, Brethren, stand fast, and hold the Traditions you have been taught, whether by Word, or by our Epiftle. Of what Service, fays the Answerer, can this be now to any Traditions, or any fort of Doctrine, that does not appear to have been taught by the Apostles either of these Ways? Upon this he flourishes, and Lays, This I find was a Question press'd a little too hard for the Doctor to get rid of it, and therefore instead of answering it, he owns the Truth enquired after, only be pleads it is not to our Purpose, the be does not pretend to tell what could possibly have been more so. But indeed I did not find it to press at all, and my Answer was just, that it was nothing to the Purpose, because the things we plead for have appeared to have been taught at least one of those Ways, according to that excellent Rule of St. Augustine, which the learned Author of No Reason + cites, and dares not condemn, Whatever is held by the universal Church, and always observed, without being settled by any Conciliary Decree, is rightly believed an Apostolical Tradition, Therefore as I conceive we have proved all the Points we contend for to bave been always observed by the universal Church, without being settled by any Conciliary Decree, we fufficiently prove them to be of Apostolical Tradition; fo that, as I faid, his Question did not press at all, neither is it any thing to the Purpose. Indeed the learned Author of No Reafon, and our learned Opponent, do both pretend these things have not been held always by the universal Church; but then I desire the Reader to confider, that when they fay this, they are Judges in their own Cause: And I am satisfied that the learned Reader, who can judge for himfelf, when he has fairly examin'd the Testimonics on both fides, and compared them with the Originals, will find, that in every one of the controverted Points, the Fathers speak clearly of our fide. And the Unlearned may also be satisfied from unbias'd Judges, such as Mr. Thorndike, Bishop Hickes, Mr. Johnson, and Mr. Bingham, that these are Apostolical Traditions by that Rule: I call them unbias'd Judges, because they have given their Opinions in this Case in opposition to their own Practice, at least to any open and avowed Practice that they thought fit to acquaint the World with. And therefore having vindicated my former Reply, and thewn that his Answer was nothing to the Purpose, I shall say again, as I did then, that the same Reply is sufficient against his Answer to the next Text.

The Author of the Defence, fays our Opponent, had faid, These two Conveyances are not opposite and destructive of each other, but only different ways of publishing the Will of God, and only two Streams flowing from the fame Fountain! To which I faid the Answerer replies: But if they bappen to teach contrary Doctrines, as in the Cafe of the Mixture. This I faid I have answer'd already; but he adds, that he has fully sheron my Answer by no means deserves the Name of Proof. Now, though I trust that I have fully shewn the Weakness of what he has faid on this Occafion, yet for fatisfaction I will shew it farther. His Argument is this, When our Saviour makes not the least mention of any thing more in his Euchariftical Cup than the Fruit of the Vine, and yet Human Tradition is appeal'd to for making a Mixture of Water, of which our Saviour Jays not a Tittle, as though it were as necessarily incumbent upon all Christians as the Wine it self: bere is a manifest Opposition between Scripture and Tradition. unless it can be allow'd, that Water and no Water, or a Mixture and no Mixture are one and the same thing. Now, at this rate of making an Opposition between Scripture and Tradition, where Tradition teaches something more than the Scripture has taught, he must make Scripture also opposite to it self, where one Part of Scripture teaches what another Part has not taught. Thus, for Instance, our Saviour, according to St. Matthew and Mark, only gave Bread and the Cup to his Disciples, without giving them any Commandment to do this in Remembrance of him: therefore when St. Paul fays, that our Saviour commanded, faying, Do this in Remembrance of me; here is a manifest Opposition, unless a Command and no Command be the fame thing: So again, again, St. Matthew and St. Mark tells us, that there was Wine in the Cup which our Saviour gave to his Disciples : St. Luke and St. Paul do not tell us of any Liquor that was in the Cup. therefore unless it can be allow'd that Wine and no Wine, Liquor and no Liquor are the fame thing, here is a manifest Opposition. This is our learned Opponent's unanswerable Argument, if Tradition speaks of some Particulars which the Scripture has omitted, there must be an Opposition betwixt them. St. Paul is plainly as opposite to the Evangelists in one Case, as Tradition is to Scripture in the other. He makes the Celebration of the Eucharist a necessary Duty, by telling us that our Saviour said, Do this in Remembrance of me; whereas our Saviour, according to St. Matthew and St. Mark, gave no fuch Commandment. But every one must see here is really no Opposition in the Case: That though the Evangelists do not tells us that our Saviour faid, Do this, yet neither do they tell us that he did not fay fo; therefore we may believe St. Paul, when he tells us that he did fay, Do this. So, on the other Hand, supposing the Words Fruit of the Vine not to imply a Mixture, which cannot be granted, and in consequence of that Supposal, allowing that the Scriptures do not fay that our Saviour gave a mix'd Cup to his Disciples, yet neither do they fay that it was not mix'd; therefore we may believe Tradition when it fays, that the Cup was mix'd, and that our Saviour requir'd it should be so offer'd. Tradition here only teaches what the Scriptures have amitted (supposing the Words Fruit of the Vine not to imply a Mixture) and there is no more Opposition betwixt Scripture and Tradition in one Case, than betwixt St. Paul and the Evangelists in the other. Then he observes that I took Notice of his asking this Question, * What if Scripture fay nothing of Prayer for the Dead, can an after Tradition make that a necessary Duty for all Christians? And adds, that I do not pretend to fay it can. And indeed I shall freely grant him, that an AFTER Tradition, that is, a Tradition which is not Apostolical, or of equal Antiquity with the Canon of the New Testament, cannot make that a necesfary Duty for all Christians, which the Scriptures have not made fo. But if it be evidently an Apostolical Tradition, as I am firmly persuaded it is, (and conceive it has been proved to be by Mr. Thorndike, the Author of the Reasons, and Mr. Deacon) the learned Author of No Reason, &c. + allows, at least does not deny, it will make that necessary which is not otherwise so. He then takes notice that I fay, If the Scripture fays nothing of Prayer for the Dead, it is certain it has not made it unlawful. Upon which he tells me that I forget that our Dispute is not concerning the Lawfulness, but the Necessity of this Usage: And repeats it over and over again, as if I had entirely forgot it, which I shall soon shew I did not. But I thought it proper to observe, that our learned Opponent's Arguments allow'd the Lawfulness of this, as well as the other controverted Points, because the + INGENIOUS Author of No Necessity, &c. observes, that the Author of No Reason, &c. whom our learned Opponent defends, is suspected to be against the Lawfulness of thefe things, if they could be reflor'd by a proper and competent Authority; and therefore I conceived it would be the gaining a small Point to prove the Lawfulness of Praying for the Dead; believing that a Man must be convinced of the Lawfulness of a thing, before he can be perfuaded it is a necessary Duty. However, as if I aimed at proving no more than the Lawfulness of Prayers for the Dead, he fays, to prove the LAWFULNESS of them I argue they are commanded in Scripture. But if the Reader will give himself the trouble to look into what I have faid, he will fee that I bring Scripture not to prove the bare Lawfulness, but the Necessity of this Practice. For I + first take Notice of what he says with relation to Infant Baptism, and say, Then as to the NE-CESSITY of it, be gives this Reason, that our bleffed Saviour gave Commission for baptizing all Nations, of which Children are undoubtedly a Part. And the Practice of the Church fince is a good corroborating Evidence, and makes the NECESSITY more apparent and unquestionable. Hercupon I add, This is EXACTLY what is pleaded in Behalf of Prayers for the Dead. Now if it be EXACTLY the same, must it not prove the Necessity of fuch Prayers, as the other does of Infant Baptism? But I go on and shew how the Proof is exactly the same, saying, The Scripture positively requires us to make & Supplication for all Saints. The Words ALL Saints being as universal as the Words ALL Nations, this Command, as NECESSARILY obliges us to pray for ALL Saints, whether they be in this World, or whether they be departed, as the other does to baptize ALL Persons of ALL Ages. And then we fay, that the Practice of the Church fince, in all Times, at all Places, and by all the Faithful, down as low as to the Sixteenth Century, is a good corroborating Evidence, and makes the NE-

Let the impartial Reader judge if this be only pleading for the Lawfulness of Prayers for the Dead. I can't but think it is arguing for the Necessity of them as apparently as a reasonable Man can defire. But it is a very pretty Artifice to endeayour to make an unwary Reader believe that I only plead for the Lawfulness of these Prayers, that so, if he should think I have prov'd my Point, he may yet be never the nearer to my Opinion, since 'tis not the Lawfulness, but the Necessity that is disputed. However, I hope the Reader sees that this is only a Misrepresentation, and that I argue for the Necessity, and not the bare Lawfulness of Prayer for the Dead.

Yet being sensible that if Prayer for the Dead be founded upon a Text of Scripture, it will prove it to be a nevessary Duty, tho' he pretends (but falsely, as I have proved,) that I have produc'd it only to prove the Lawfulness of such Prayers, he thinks it proper to endeavour to invalidate the force of that Text. And first he desires us to acquaint him, What ancient, or even modern Commentators of Note, we have to produce in behalf of our Interpretation of the Apostle's Words? Now as to ancient Commentators, we may, in our turn, defire to know of him which of them has particularly applied our Saviour's Command, to baptize all. Nations to the Case of Infant Baptism? We do not find they had any Dispute about the Matter; Infants were then generally Baptized, and no Body that we know of oppos-And therefore when they expounded that Text of St. Matthew, they had no occasion to apply it particularly to Infants, as the medern Commentators have. So as to Prayers for the Saints departed, the Ancients had no Disputes about bout it, none that we read of ever opposed it but the Heretick Aerius; neither did he argue that it was contrary to Scripture, but only that it was of no Service to the Dead; and therefore St. Epiphanius, who is the only one of the Ancients that takes Notice of him to refute him, had little Occasion to have recourse to Scripture when he opposed him. However, let our Opponent shew us where any of the Ancients have applied our Saviour's Command to baptize all Nations to the Case of Infant Baptism, and I will shew him where they have apply'd Supplication for all Saints to Prayers for the Dead. Nor is it to be wonder'd at if modern Commentators have not apply'd this Text as we have done, fince neither Papists nor Protestants either practise or plead for Prayers for Saints departed; that is, such as fleep in Peace, and are at rest from their Labours. The Papists pray for no other Dead except such as they suppose to be in Purgatory? And the Protestants pray for no Dead at all. Therefore what wonder if both of them give a different turn to this plain Text? But we may say both of this Text, and that of Baptizing all Nations, that they are plain and clear in themselves, and need no Comment to make them more fo, and the Practice of the universal Church in the best and purest times warrants our Exposition of them.

But our learned Opponent is resolv'd to deprive us of all Advantage from this Text, and says, Though the Word Ayioi, Saints, be frequently used in the New Testament, to denote the Members of the Christian Church here, I dare be positive be will not find it so applied to those that are departed from us. And I am firmly of Opinion this will not be disproved. I perceive indeed deed that an Exception will be made to this Doctrine, from those Words of the Evangelist, Many Bodies of Saints which flept arofe. And the Doctor bints no lefs: But I am, however, to assure the Reader these Words had been seriously considered before Hand, and fully concluded not to interfere with the foregoing Observation. For it is to be noted, that the Participle there is of the perfect, and not the prefent Tenfe, not nouwwww. but nexcepaperow, not of the Saints afleep, but that bad been asleep, though now alive again, and cal-"led "Ayior fa Name commonly given to the Christians) because once more Members of the Christian Church upon Earth. So that they not being afleep when called Lyin, it can never follow from hence, that this Title belongs to any that are now affeep, and consequently can never warrant the Use of Prayers for the Dead from those Words of the Apostle directing to pray for ALE SAINTS. But this has been affeady answer'd by the Author ; of the Reasons, who very well observes, that these Saints could not be faid to be alive because they appear'd in their Bodies: For if there was no vital Union between the Souls and Bodies of these Saints, they were still in a State of Separation, and belonged to the Division of the other World : But that there was no fuch vital Union, is levident, because their appearing was no Result of a proper Resurrection: Twas only a short miraculous Scene, to bonour our Saviour's Passion and rising from the Dead. For that there never was, nor will be any Resurrection, excepting our Saviour's, till his fecond coming, is plain from the Apostle St. Paul; who declares, * that as in Adam all die, fo in Chriff thalf here again recite. As he spake by the

shall all be made alive: But every Man in his own Order; Christ the first Fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. Thus we see none of Adam's Descendants are to expect a Resurrection, 'till our Saviour's coming to Judgment. And those who have no Re-union of Soul and Body can't be faid to be alive, notwithstanding any transient Appearance of such a Condition. I shall add, that those who made only such a transient Appearance cannot be said to bave been once more Members of the Christian Church upon Earth: For every Member of the Christian Church upon Earth is in a State of Warfare with the World, the Flesh, and the Devil; he is subject to Temptations, which he must continually fight with, he needs the Affiftance of the Word and Sacraments to strengthen him in the Combat; but these Saints had finished their Courfe, and did not come here to begin it again, or to proceed in it, which they must have done, had they been again Members of the Christian Church on Earth. But, as the Author of the Reasons observes farther, the Text says, That many Bodies of Saints which SLERTY arose. Thus they are expressy called Saints while they slept. that is, when they were dead in the Scripture Language. Nor will our Opponent's Criticism about the Greek Præter-perfect Tenle help him, for the English is also in the Perfect Tense, and the Sense is the same. However, as I have observed in my Discourse on the Liturgies, this is far from being the only Text where the Word ayion, Saints, is apply'd to those that are departed this Life, there are a great many more which I shall here again recite. * As he spake by the Vand of Rest and Ook page

Since therefore there are fo many plan Texts to this Purpole, I shall leave the Reader to judge what Reason our learned Opponent could have to be for positive that the word aying Saints, is never apply'd in the New Testament to those that are departed from us? Were not the ancient Prophets, that had been fince the World began, departed before these Words were spoken of them, which are written in the New Tellament? Yet they are there calbut that the

led ayour Saints. Shall the Saints judge the World before they are departed hence? Yet they are spoken of as being Saints at the time when they shall judge the World. Are we Fellow-Citizens only of the Saints on Earth? Are the Saints in Light not departed hence? Will our Lord Felus come only with those that are Members of his Church on Earth? Is a Reward to be given to those that were dead when St. John wrote the Revelations? Were those living upon Earth whose Blood was shed? Were those still upon Earth, with whose Blood the Woman was drunken? Were not the Saints, the Apostle St. John speaks of in the Revelations, dead when he wrote that Prophecy? Which of the Apoilles was then living belides himself? Therefore since it is fo evident that the Title Saints in the Language of the New Testament, as well as in our present common Speech, does belong to those that are afleep in Christ, a Command to pray for ALL SAINTS includes them as well as those that are living upon Earth. And this Command of St. Paul, to make Supplication for all Saints, obliges us to pray for the Saints departed in the same manner as the Command of our Saviour to baptize all Nations, obliges us to baptize Infants. And whatever he has faid to prove that Infants ought to be baptiz'd, because our Saviour commanded to baptize all Nations, evidently proves that the Saints departed ought to be prayed for, because St. Paul requires us to make Supplication for all Saints. Our learned Opponent has no Objection to this, but that the Word Saints is never applied, in the New Testament, to those that are departed from us, which being prov'd to be false by so many plain Instances, the Argument stands good. In the next place our learned Opponent * obferves that we fay, They themselves are forced to fly to Tradition in some Cases, particularly in the Cases of Infant Baptism and the Lord's Day. And whereas he had taken upon him to prove our Obligation to baptize Infants from our Saviour's Command to baptize all Nations, I shewed we had as positive a Command to make Supplication for all Saints: This he pretended to return an Answer to, but I trust I have here given so full a Reply to that Answer as will fatisfy the Reader of the Insufficiency of it. He also had pretended to return an Answer to what was said of the Tradition concerning the Lord's Day, but I reply'd that I had obviated all he had faid on that occafion; he only fays, I have been far from doing it; therefore I must defire the Reader to consult what I t have faid of that Matter, and also what the has faid, and then judge whether the Scripture teaches that we lie under any necessary Obligation to observe the Lord's Day, or whether that Obligation is not taught by Tradition only.

Then he tells us, * That the learned Author of the Defence positively assirms, that there is nothing in Scripture to prove Scripture. By which he plainly meant, that there was nothing in Scripture to teach us what Books made up the Scriptures; what were divinely inspired, and what Apocryphal. Therefore what fignifies our learned Opponent's Quotation from Clemens Alexandrinus, and his long Discourse, (though otherwife very good) to shew that the Scriptures are a demonstrative proof of themselves: when he is forced to own, That be never pretended this was sufficient to settle the Canon of Scripture, to affure us what Books belong to that sacred Code, and what do not, or bow we shall certainly distinguish Scripture from Apocrypha. He expresly fays that for this, We must depend upon those who made the Distinction, and settled the Canon, and upon others that have transmitted it down to us, as being the compleatest and best Evidence the Nature of the thing is capable of; than which no reasonable Man would in any Case desire more. But it does not appear, neither is it pretended, that those who made the Distinction, and settled the Canon were inspired Men, and acted by an infallible Spirit. Yet the Nature of the thing was capable of that Evidence. St. John, who was the longest liver of the Apostles, and whose Gospel was the last Book of the New Testament which was written, was capable of giving us a Catalogue of all the Books which God intended should make up that facred Volume. * Eusebius tells us, that he faw and approved the three Gospels of St. Matthew, St. Mark, and St. Luke, and that he wrote his own to fapply some Matters of Faith relating to our Saviour's Divinity, which he judged not fufficiently taught by them. Now St. John was certainly as capable of telling us all this himfelf, as of leaving it to the Elders of Ephefus to deliver it by Tradition: And he could as cafily have put it into Writing as Eufebius afterwards And as all the other Apostles were then dead, and he alone surviving, he could not but know that the last Book he wrote would be the last Book of holy Scripture: He might then have given us a Catalogue of all the Books of the New Testament, and he being an inspired Writer, his Evidence would have been better than any human Evidence whatsoever. So that we cannot say, that the Evidence we have is the compleatest and best Evidence the Nature of the thing is capable of: For the thing in its own Nature was capable of Inspired or Divine Evidence, yet the Evidence we have is but Human. We can only say it is the best that God in his Providence thought expedient to give us, that it is sufficient Evidence, and such any reasonable Man

But, fays our Opponent, * If the Doctor would infer from bence, that because Tradition is to be relied upon, where it is the best Evidence that can be had, therefore it is to be made our Rule in all Cases, and we must not so much as pretend to interpret a plain, easy Text of Scripture, without recourse had to Tradition for its Right, and sometimes for its wrong Sense, as it often happens in this present Dispute, he cannot expect this will be granted him, without much better Authority than he is ever like to bring for it. But I shall infer from hence, that Tradition may be a sufficient Evidence, and that it is so wherever it is truly Primitive and Universal: And that as it is allowed to be sufficient Evidence for the Canon of Scripture, fo where we have as good and as full Evidence for any other Doctrine or Practice, it is sufficient Evidence also, unless our Opponent can give a better Reason why it should not be so than he has yet done. For to say that the Canon of Scripture is not capable of better

Evidence; and from thence to infer a Difference in the Case, is false, since, as I have shewed, the Settlement of that Canon is capable of better Evidence, if God had feen it expedient to have given it. And if he will not fometimes have recourse to Tradition to interpret a feemingly plain eafy Text, I defire to know how he will interpret that plain easy Text, * Ye also ought to wash one another's Feet. Is it possible any Text should be plainer or easier than that? Our Saviour did actually and literally wash his Disciples Feet, and fays expresly, Te also ought to wash one another's Feet. For I have given you an Example that ye should do as I have done to you. Is there a plainer easier Text in the New Testament? I defire therefore to know of our Opponent, whether actually and literally to wash one another's Feet, as our Saviour actually and literally did, be enjoyn'd by this Command? Or if it is not, what other Reason he has to think so, but only that the Church has never understood it literally? That is, Tradition is against such a literal Interpretation: So that I am persuaded our Opponent himself must be forced to have recourse to Tradition to interpret a plain easy Text of Scripture. And if he must, why should it be a Fault in us to fay that it may fometimes be neceffary to have recourse to Tradition, to understand a seemingly plain easy Text. As to having recourse to Tradition to interpret in a wrong Sense, I defire he will be so kind as to shew us any Tradition truly Primitive and Universal (and we plead for no other) that has interpreted Scripture in a wrong Sense nob vey ead and toled soit

He goes on, and fays, I am forry to find him fay, there is no fuller or larger Tradition, to fettle the certain Number of the Books of the Old and New Testament, than there is for the Mixture, Prayer for the Dead, &c. because if the Canon were no better settled than the Necessity of these, for that is what we dispute about, it would be in a very tottering Condition. But I shall not enlarge upon this, both because I have just now own'd, that we receive the Canon by Tradition, and because we had no other way for it to be convey'd down to us; whereas had these Usages been any where taught in Scripture, they would have been much better learned from our Saviour and bis Apostles own Words, than from the Tradition now pleaded for them. In this Passage our learned Opponent cannot deny but we have as good Evidence for the primitive and univerfal Practice of the Points disputed, as we have for the Canon of Scripture, but we have not so good Evidence for the NECESSITY of them; that is, as we may collect from the Passage last consider'd, compar'd with the present Passage, we have not the best Evidence the Nature of the thing is capable of, they are not to be learn'd from our Saviour and his Apostles own Words, where they would have been much better learn'd. But I must say again, that the Question is not whether the things in their own Nature are incapable of better Evidence, but whether the Evidence we have for them be not sufficient to satisfy any reafonable Man. I have shew'd, that the Canon of Scripture is capable of Scripture Evidence; if God had feen it expedient, he might have directed St. John when he wrote his Gospel, the last Book of the New Testament that was written, to have given us a Catalogue of all the Inspired Writings, and then the Canon of Scripture would K 3 have had better Evidence: So that it is false to fay, that we had no other way for the Canon of Scripture to be convey'd down to us but Tradition: For it might have been convey'd to us by Scripture, if God had feen it expedient. But if Tradition alone be sufficient Evidence for the Canon of Scripture, then where Tradition gives us as full Evidence for other things, we ought to judge fuch Evidence to be fufficient, notwithstanding they may in their own Nature be capable of better. And I must say it, that there is not an earlier Evidence than Justin Martyr for the Canon of the New Testament, and he is our Evidence for the Mixture also: Nay, I will say that there is not an earlier Evidence for the Canon of Scripture than Ireneus and Tertullian, who were later than Justin Martyr, and those two are Evidences for the four controverted Points; that is, Irenaus is an Evidence for three of them, the Mixture, the Oblation, and the Invocation; and Tertullian for the fourth, which is Prayer for the Dead. So that we have as early Tradition for all the Points disputed, as we have for the Canon of Scripture. And our Tradition is also as universal, for there are not more Fathers who testify for the Canon of Scripture, in the three first Centuries, or before the Council of Nice, than there are who testify for all the Points now in dispute. So that our Evidence for the one is full as good as for the other.

In the next place * our learned Opponent obferves that I had said, that the Answerer and the learned Author differ in this, as far as I am able to judge in the Case, that the Author is for making Scripture and that primitive, universal, and uninterrupted Tradition, by which we receive the Canon of Scripture, to go hand in hand together, and mutually to support each other; but the An-Swerer is for setting them at Variance, and making them to thwart and oppose each other. But He conceives he has given no occasion for such a Charge: For, says he, be is not for setting them any way at Variance, but for using both as Occasion offers; only he is for ascribing to each its proper Office, and not making Scripture truckle to Tradition, if any Difference unhappily drife betwixt them. But is it not fetting Scripture and Tradition at Variance, to fay that fuch Tradition as teaches any thing, as of Necessity to Salvation, which the Scripture has not taught at all, is opposite to Scripture, interferes with Scripture, is contrary to Scripture, and the like? Would not he be thought to fet the Common Law and Statute Law in this Nation at Variance, who should fay, that to fet up any thing as obligatory by Custom, which is not mention'd by any Act of Parliament, is to fet up what interferes with, and is opposite and contrary to the Statute Book? And that he who makes any thing to be a Law by Custom only, makes the Statute Book truckle to Custom? Yet this is plainly the Case here. He fays, to teach any thing as necessary to Salvation, which the Scripture has not taught at all, is to make Scripture truckle to Tradition. But he must first shew us, which he has not been able to do, that the Scripture any where tells us, either in express Words, or any fair Consequence, that all things necessary to Salvation are taught in Scripture. For I have shew'd that all the Texts he has produc'd to this Purpole only refer us to the Old Testament, and therefore do not anfwer his Purpose: For if they are not to be underflood exclusive of other Means of Salvation, they do not exclude Tradition; and if they are underflood exclusive, then they exclude the New Testament as well as Tradition. It is true, I do own the Scripture for the Rule of Faith, and that we are not to for sake that out of regard to Tradition, but stedfastly adhere to it, when sever any unscriptural Tradition comes in Competition with it. But then I do not conceive that Tradition comes in Com--petition with it, which teaches nothing contrary to it, though it may happen to teach something wherein the Scripture is filent; for I think, and to I believe does every Body befides our learned Opponent, that there is a great Difference betwixt teaching what is contrary to Scripture, and teaching what the Scripture fays no-

The Doctor, adds our learned Opponent, exclaims loudly against the Answerer, for saying the Author of the Reasons is for setting up Tradition, as rather to be attended to than Scripture. Upon which he fays, Whether this be not the true State of the Difference, I leave to any unprejudic'd Perfon to determine. And truly I am very willing to do the same: For, I conceive, no unprejudic'd Person can think, that to say Tradition is to be attended to where the Scripture is filent, is to fay, that Tradition is rather to be attended to than Scripture. For it is not leaving Scripture to fet up Tradition, if we attend to Scripture whereever it speaks, and to Tradition only where the Scripture does not speak at all, or not so clearly as Tradition. * But Mr. Deacon has fo fully anfwer'd all that our learned Opponent has faid in this and the next Paragraph, that I need take no farther Notice of them, only to let him know that I think, except he can better prove his Charge against the Author of the Reasons, and Mr. Deacon, he ought, (as + he engages to do, if he have done that Author the Wrong thus complain'd of) to beg that Author's and Mr. Deacon's Pardon. The most that the Author of the Reafonsy Mr. Deacon, the Author of the Necessity of an Alteration, or my felf, or indeed any of us have faid on this Occasion, amounts to no more than what Dr. Hammond taught without Censure above fixty Years ago in his # Practical Catechism, where he says exprelly, That next the Scripture, the Catholick Church of the first and purest Times (especially when the subsequent Ages do also accord with that for many hundred Years) is the greatest Authority, whence it follows, that Meekness requires my Obedience and Submission to the Catholick Apostolick Church, and not to the Particular wherein I live; so far as that I am to retain that Catholick Apostolick, and not this novel, corrupt, not Catholick Doctrine. Therefore if the Church wherein I was baptized, shall by Authority or Law fet up that which, if it be not contrary to plain Words of Scripture, is yet contrary to the Doctrine or Practice of the universal Church of the first and purest Times, Meekness requires me in no Case to subscribe to, or act any thing which is contrary to this Catholick Doctrine. This is all we have pleaded for, and is therefore far from setting up Tradition, as rather to be attended to than Scripture, which our learned Opponent continually fuggests that we do. We only set up Tradition as the next Authority to Scripture, an Authority that is to be obeyed where the Scripture is filent or not clear. Therefore our Opponent's Suggeftion, which he has so much insisted on, is apparently wrong. And by his constant repeating and endeavouring to maintain this Suggestion, he only shews that he cannot distinguish betwixt what is to be obeyed in the first place, and what in the fecond; supposing that nothing can command our Obedience in the next place to Scripture, and be allowed to require our Obedience where the Scripture is filent, but it must be set up as rather to be attended to than Scripture; but I hope the judicious Reader will see the Difference, and confequently the Falseness of the Suggestion.

I need not detain the Reader with what is faid about Homer and Virgil, we are agreed that neither those, nor any other ancient Authors are to be understood without the Help of Tradition, and a Knowledge of the Customs and Practices of the Times wherein they wrote. As to what he fays of the City Charter, and a Grant of an Estate, he has himself * given an Answer which directly ferves our Purpole as much as any thing we can defire: Which is this, Since your Custom is of so long standing, that the true Original cannot be traced out, you are concern'd to follow it, though withal not so much from the Age of it, as because it may justly be supposed that there was some reasonable, and perhaps valuable Consideration, for the first Allowance of it. This is exactly parallel to our Case; and we say, Since these Traditions are of so long standing, that the true Original cannot be traced out, we are concern'd to

He observes, * that the Author of the Necessity of an Alteration represents Tradition, as an Authority obliging us to what we are not obliged to by Scripture, and that I take it only as an Evidence or Witness to inform us what the Scriptures have always been understood to require. And desires us to decide this between our selves. I trust therefore that I have now decided it, when I own that I declare my felf of the Opinion Doctor Hammond was above fixty Years ago, That Primitive and Catholick Tradition is to be obey'd where it does not contradict Scripture (which I am fatisfied no Primitive Catholick Tradition ever did) as being the next Authority to Scripture, and above the Authority of any particular Church what seever: And that we are obliged to conform to the Doctrine and Practice of the Universal Church in the first and purest Times, whatever any particular Church shall ordain to the contrary, and whatever we may suffer by it. If therefore I have said any thing which may feem not agreeable to this Opinion, I here retract it.

I faid, that our Saviour, by faying he would drink no more of the Fruit of the Vine, could mean no other than that he would drink no more of the Paschal Cup. This, † fays our learned Opponent, is perfectly begging the Question, unless be could have proved that our Lord could not possibly mean his own Eucharistick Cup. I will therefore here give the Reader the Proofs Dr. Hammond has given, why in St. Matthew and

St. Mark, as well as in St. Luke, by the Words Fruit of the Vine, we are to understand the Pafchal Cup: where he will find Dr. Hammond does not propose this as an Explanation made upon Conjecture, as * the Opponent represents him to have done, but as an unquestionable rendring and clearing all Difficulties. The Doctor having in his Comment upon this Text, as it stands in St. Matthew's Gospel, given two Interpretations of it which are apparently weak, fays, "But " the Truth is, there is a third Way of inter-" preting this Verse, which by comparing it " with the Words of St. Luke, seems much the " most probable of all, that this yévvnµa & au-" πέλε, Fruit of the Vine, signifies the Cup in the "Passover peculiarly, or the Cup of Charity in " the Postcænium of the Passover, wherein the "Sacrament of Christ's Blood was founded: " For that Christ was now to die, and neither " before, nor after his Death and Refurrection, " to eat any more Passovers with them, or any e more to drink this Cup of Charity, now de-" fign'd to a Christian Use, is sufficiently evident. To this therefore is agreeable what he faith, Luke xxii. 17. With defire have I defired " to eat this Passover with you before I suffer, " meaning now to transmute this Cup there into " the Sacrament of Charity, to be observ'd in the "Christian Church for ever after. And there-" fore it is observable in St. Luke, that the Words " are directly applied, chap. xxii. 16. to the Paf-" fover, I have desir'd to eat this Passover, for I " will no more eat, it airs thereof, or of that; " that is, of the Passover, &c. and by repeating " the Words again of the Cup, ver. 18. it is all

"Reason that that be rendred of the Cup in the "Passover, or the Sacramental Cup of Charity, "as the former of the Bread in that Postewnium. "This appears to me an Unquestionable "RENDRING AND CLEARING ALL DIFFICUL" TIES." And the Truth is, if St. Matthew and St. Mark are not interpreted by St. Luke, who expressly teaches, that it was the Paschal Cup which our Saviour call'd the Fruit of the Vine, there will be found such Difficulties as I am per-suaded our learned Opponent cannot get over.

He observes, * that I add that we learn from Justin Martyr, that the Apostles did direct that the Eucharistical Cup should contain Wine with a Mixture of Water. And takes Notice, that the Author of the Reasons and Defence had likewise told us this before. But, adds, neither he nor the Doctor has been able to produce the Words in which Justin affirms it; otherwise it was to be hoped we might have feen them. But I conceive the Author of the Defence did tell the Words wherein Justin teaches, that the Apostles did direct that the Eucharistical Cup should contain Wine mixed with Water; when, after showing how that Father tells the Emperor, that The Deacons gave all the Congregation part of the Bread, Wine and Water which was Eucharistized; he immediately subjoins + that Justin adds, that The Apostles were commanded by our Saviour to celebrate in the same manner; which is the very Sense of Justin's Words I have here cited a little before; and in which he particularly teaches, that Water made part of the Cup, as the Apostles taught our Saviour instituted it; otherwise his Argument of the Demons teaching their Prieffs to offer a Cup of Water in the Mysteries of Myshra, had been no Imitation of this Sacrament. as he fays it was. If the Reader will look back upon the Passage, as I have cited it from Justin, he will fee that fuftin does plainly enough affirm, that they were taught by the Apostles to offer Water in the Eucharist as well as Wine, though our learned Opponent can find no Words to that here will be found fuch Difficulties as Isloque

And thus, fays our learned Opponent, * I take deave of this Doctor, 'till be shall pleafe to call again upon me. But with this following Request; That he will please to inform me bow tong he has known Three of the Four Usages contended for, to be of such Necessity as he now represents them to be; and what new Discoveries be has made in their Favour, fince be left the Communion of which be was. Before that one was only necessary, and the other three only defired. And I cannot apprehend bow the Framing and Enjoining a New Communion Office could make those Estential which were not fo before. Now suppose I should give no Anfwer to this Request, what would it fignify? Would the Merits of the Caufe be better or worfe, for my changing my Opinion? Suppose he had defir'd me to inform him how long I had been a Non-juror? It is very certain I was not always fo. Does it make the Non-juror's Cause better or worfe, to fay I have changed my Opinion with relation to it? Will he alk me what New Discoveries I have made in the Non-juror's Favour, which I had not, or might not have made before? It is certain there is no more Reafon why any one should be a Non-juror now,

than there was why he should have been one ten or twenty Years ago, if he was then required to take the Oaths, as I was. If therefore any one should ask me why I am a Non-juror now, yet was not to then, and what New Discoveries I have made fince? I should readily Answer, that I have made no New Discoveries fince, which I might not as easily have made before if I had fet about it: That I was too much led by the Example of others, whom I looked upon as very wife and very good Men; and therefore did not fo well attend to, nor fo feriously confider and examine the Arguments on both fides, as I ought to have done. I fatisfy'd my felf with Salvo's and colourable Arguments, which upon farther Examination I found would not hold. And when I had fatisfied my felf that fuch Salvo's would not bear a strict Test, I then readily quitted all that I held by virtue of any Oaths I had taken, and openly professed my self a Non-juror. If the learned Opponent thinks this to be a Prejudice to the Non-juror's Cause, that I was not always of their Opinion; I defire he will be pleafed to tell me fo. If it be not, I can't see how it is any Prejudice to our Cause in the present Controversy to fay I was not always of the Opinion I am now of. I must therefore needs say, that this Request is very impertinent, fince it tends nothing to the Merits of the Cause which way soever it is to be answered. But perhaps it may be design'd to draw some personal Reflection upon me, as a Man variable in my Opinions, who can believe that to be EF sential to Day, which I did not think to be so Yesterday. If so, then whosoever changes his Opinion, tho' for the better, justly diminishes his Reputation, and no Man must be allow'd to be wifer one Day then he was the Day before. It

It is true, to change, one's Opinion does imply Reflection, and supposes an Acknowledgement of Mistake: However, I think it is more reputable to acknowledge a Mistake, when a Man becomes sensible that he was in one, than it is wilfully to perfift in it. Tho' fuch is the Nature of Man, as I have found by Experience, that this is not to be done without some Struggles and Conflicts within himself. I am sensible how difficult it is to overcome an Error which a Man has long imbibed: To believe not only that my felf, who am not worthy of Name or Notice, and whose Reputation, whether good or bad, is of no Consequence except to my self; but that a Church, which has made, and does make such a Figure in the Christian World as the Church of England; a Church that has more than once fealed her Faith with the Blood, both of her Fathers and her Sons; a Church that has profes'd to reform her felf according to the Standard of the truly Primitive and Apostolick Church; which has always had, and still has many Members of her Communion deservedly great and eminent for their Learning, Piety, and all other Virtues, who have diligently fearched the Scriptures and the Fathers, and whose Books I am not worthy to bear after them; that this Church, to which these great Men have and do strictly adhere, and which they extol as needing no farther Reformation either in Doctrine or her Form of Worship, should yet at last be found to be defective in Essential Points; this is indeed very difficult for one bred in her Communion to be brought to believe. And therefore it is not to be wonder'd, if after I became senfible that the four controverted Points were practifed by the universal Church in the first and purest times, it was long before I could prevail with my self to believe them Essential Points, and necessary to Salvation; or if when I was brought to believe one was so, I yet hesitated as to the other three: My hearty Affection to the Church of England, the very great Esteem and Veneration I had for her, made me unwilling to believe it possible she could have so many Defects. But when upon farther Consideration, and, I trust, a more impartial Examination of all these Points, I found the Light to be clear, and the Desection palpably discernable; I could not

These are the Reasons which caused me to believe all the controverted Points to be desideranda only, for a confiderable time before I could persuade my self they were any of them Essential. But as I for some time applied my self to examine the Oblation and Invocation, before I fet my felf to examine what was to be judged concerning the Mixture and Prayer for the Dead, fo I was sooner convinced of their Effentiality. However, when I came to read the Liturgies, as publish'd by Renaudotius, (a Book recommended to me by a very learned worthy Gentleman of our Opponent's Communion) and finding most of these Liturgies, as well as that in the Constitutions, to speak of our Saviour's mixing the Cup at the Inflitution, and that there was not one of them that omitted Prayers for the Dead, I thought it proper farther to examine those Points than I had done before, and was then also convinced of their Essentiality. This I did before the Framing and Enjoining a New Communion Office. And I have in my Discourse upon the Liturgies, lately publish'd, given my Reasons at large why I believe all these to be Essential Points: And if our learned Opponent can return a fatisfactory Answer to the Reasons there given, he may say, that I have changed my Opinion without Ground. But if I had good Grounds to change my Opinion, what matters it whether I changed it before or after the Framing and Enjoining the New Communion Office? However, if I had 'till this time thought, and should ever after believe but one of these Points to be Essential; yet since our Opponent and his Friends would not yield me even that Effential Point, I was obliged to oin with those that would: For, as I then believ'd, and still do, that what I proposed was an Essential Part of Religion, and of absolute Necesfity in order to Salvation, I was convinced, as the learned Author of No Reason, &c. had taught me, That in this Case, no fear of its Consequences might dissuade from, nor could justify the Refusal of it; but each one must faithfully discharge his Duty, and leave the Events to God's all-wise Providence, which over-rules all things, and can easily cause them to work together for good to them that love him. Therefore, being denied that one Point which I believed an Essential Point of Religion, and being uncapable of enjoying it in the Communion of our Opponent and his Friends, (for I could not receive the Communion at the Hands of those who refused me what I believed an Esfential Part of it) I immediately joined my self to those in whose Communion I was persuaded I might faithfully discharge my Duty. And their requiring fome things of me which I had long been persuaded were desideranda, which I as well as they defired might be restor'd, could be no Objection to my Communion with them, suppo-

fing I had never been induced to believe them to be Effential. For the Refusal of one Estential Part of Religion, as I have shew'd the learned Author of No Reason allows, was sufficient to justify my leaving the Communion in which that was refused me: And the Addition of what I believ'd defirable, I am well fatisfy'd ought not to have kept me from the Communion of those with whom I have joined. And if upon Conference with those with whom I now hold Communion, and a farther Enquiry made into the other controverted Points. I have been induced to believe them also to be Effential, I see not what Advantage this will be to our Opponent's Cause: For though the Framing and Enjoining a new Communion Office could not make those Essential which were not so before; yet I might be, and certainly was induced by other Reasons to believe them to be so: Which Reasons I have now given in my Discourse upon the Liturgies lately publish'd, and in this Treatile also.
